First, and I believe most important, is for all Americans to steady themselves for a lot of misinformation. This will come from all angles of attack. In war and intelligence reporting we say, first reports are always wrong. That’s a good starting point for us all.

War is never in any nation’s interest unless national survival is at stake. In America, the decision to go to war should be a joint decision by the executive and legislative branches of government. There will be untold costs and consequences and our nation must be together on this issue—like it or not, our nation going to war is not the sole prerogative of the executive branch. We should demand that Congress has skin in this “game” just as our President and our military forces have skin in it.

For a minute, consider the lost resources spent fighting in Iraq and Afghanistan (trillions of $’s and thousands of lives), never mind Ukraine and Venezuela (we still have a naval armada minding this critical part of the world).

We also need to consider what responses might come from China (ie., Taiwan), Russia (use of Nukes), or Turkey (a NATO ally, hopefully they sit this one out), and is our homeland at risk to terrorist counter-strikes?

That said, a PROLONGED war is never in America’s interests. However, once war is waged, it is an unleashing of emotions that can easily cause it to be endless.

We’ve been told time and again, America can no longer afford endless wars. That is a seriously true statement, we really cannot afford another endless war or conflict.

Breaking: WAR in IRAN

Therefore, we want to see if our Congress will respond with full throated support for our military operations and our troops. We also want them to vote their beliefs whether or not they support these actions. We also want there to be as much transparency as possible from our White House on those clear objectives that describe vital national security interests, precisely how long this war will last and what objectives, once achieved, will allow us to rapidly extract ourselves from this war.

We have far too many problems here at home and we cannot afford open ended ventures back in the Middle East on behalf of others. We have to get back to taking care of America First as fast as possible.

Pray for our troops and like millions of Americans, we want to be at peace. We also want freedom loving people around the world to know we stand with your fight to achieve freedom and once achieved, we will open the doors of America to fully embrace your desire to live freely and in peace.

But also understand achieving freedom takes sacrifice and comes at a cost. Americans understand that, our own American Revolution is a perfect example of sacrifice.

For those that don’t understand scale and scope, Iran is four times the size of California with over 90 million people. A few strikes and a few days does not solve all of its problems. The people of America need to understand this while the people of Iran are living it.

In war, the best plans provide the most options right up to the last possible minute. I know our military is exceptional and well led. But going to war is also a failure of diplomacy and policy. Remember, Iran also had many chances to come to the table. Let’s pray President Trump sits his team down and has solutions for the long haul. I believe he does but the bureaucratic challenges he faces are immense.

God bless America and may God keep us safe and secure in the days, weeks and months ahead.

Pray for all those in harms way, especially our great military.

Letter from the Editor

by: Leesa Bolden, LAc
TFPP Editor in Chief

The season is coming to an end and we appreciate all of the snowbirds that blessed our town with your joy and enthusiasm. Without you coming each year many of our businesses would fail and Quartzsite would simply be a truck stop for those traveling on I-10. We pray that America is thriving and the World is settled enough for you to return again next year.

We must all remember (no matter where we are from) that our home Country needs our help. Engage in the process of making a change within yourself and your community and fight for the freedoms we so enjoy. Pray for the leaders of the World to embrace the love, strength and bravery of Jesus Christ, for all of humanity would benefit if we all lived a Christ-like life. This is a somber time in the World, yet we must all remember to allow NOTHING to take away our JOY.

In that spirit, I have tried to bring you some good news but yet again, there is little of that to report on. To be honest, I could use some assistance in that. If you know of something great that needs to be shared, please write to me and point this out. It is hard to scour the internet for the news and not get caught up in all that is doom and gloom, probably by design. A joyous society thrives and Satan wants no part of that, so keep your heads high and focus solely on what you want to see happen. If thoughts become things, keep your mind focused on the outcome you want to see, rather than what you don't. I will continue to pray for all truth to be shown. For light and love to overcome darkness and hate. For all humans to experience joy, abundance and good health.

For any of this to become a reality, we must all recognize that we have all been lied to by those who seek power. We have been manipulated and the truth of our history has been altered. We all have our own belief systems that are being challenged daily. Remain open to accepting that even our most deeply held beliefs could very well be wrong and acceptance of this new information could be difficult but could set us free. One word of advice is to examine the scripts in your head. If they resemble those being told on all of your media outlets, question them. Ask yourself, what if this is not true and is this a distraction from all that is actually important, especially when you are triggered by what you are hearing.

I hope you love this month's issue of the paper and use the information to question everything. To find truth and beauty where there seems to be none is part of living a Christ-like life. The answers to all of our problems in this World have been hidden from us. Free energy systems exist. True healing systems exist and many would not need healing if all who seek power were to embody the spirit of Christ. Regardless of your "religion" or lack of, the spirit of Christ is one of love and strength, embrace that.

Feature Highlights

Factory Stock Feature #1 kicked off with a fierce family battle between Erik and Derek King, with Enzo Decker right in the mix. Derek jumped out to an early lead while Enzo and Erik fought hard for second. A late part failure slowed Erik, allowing Enzo to secure the runner-up spot. Brandon Jones charged his way to a career-first podium finish in third, while Derek King drove on to capture the win.

David Jones secured a commanding win despite a second-place finish in his first race at Blythe Speedway, while Decker held on for third.

In the Mini Stock Feature, Wynonna Ragland piloted the #04w to a dominant victory. Behind her, young Shelby Decker and Brandon Conners battled intensely throughout the race. On the final lap, Decker suffered a right-front tire failure and made contact with Conners. Conners secured an impressive sec-

By: Michael T. Flynn LTG USA (RET) 02/28/2026 genflynn.substack.com

Today was an historic day in the region of the Middle East and around the world. That said, my training and education as well as a life's worth of experience have taught me many things. When the euphoria of successful military operations end, what comes next? Below is an attempt to address this vital question.

First, the euphoria from today's strikes such as precision hits on IRGC command nodes, nuclear infrastructure remnants, missile arrays, and top leadership (including the reported death of Supreme Leader Ali Khamenei) will inevitably give way to harder questions of "what comes next?"

Operations Epic Fury (U.S.), and Roaring Lion (Israel), launched February 28, 2026, after the Islamic regime rejected maximalist demands in Geneva talks. It's not a one-off raid like this past June 2025; it's a sustained campaign to degrade existential threats: nuclear breakout, ballistic missiles, Iran's navy, and the regime's ability to project terror via proxies.

Initial high-fives in Jerusalem, Washington, and among Iranian diaspora communities (reports of street celebrations waving pre-1979 flags and Reza Pahlavi portraits) stem from real tactical wins: hundreds of targets damaged, air defenses suppressed, and a decapitation strike that severs the theocracy's symbolic head. But euphoria fades fast when the bill arrives; financial, strategic, human, and when the fog of war clears on Iran's response.

Short-term realities (days/weeks): Iran has already retaliated with ballistic missiles and drones against

Iran SITREP

Israel and U.S. bases in Bahrain, Kuwait, Qatar, UAE (and possibly others). Expect more: proxy activations (though Hezbollah is gutted, Houthis/Iraqi militias remain), attempts to harass Gulf shipping or mine the Strait of Hormuz (20% of global oil), and asymmetric hits. U.S./Israeli air and naval superiority can blunt most of this, but casualties or oil spikes will test domestic support.

No U.S. ground invasion is planned or feasible. Trump's messaging emphasizes "Iranians seize your destiny," with offers of immunity to defecting forces. Strikes will continue "as long as necessary" to "raze" the missile program and "annihilate" naval capabilities. The regime's survival instinct historically favors calibrated restraint over all-out suicide to preserve power.

When the initial rush ends: the branching paths U.S. intelligence reportedly modeled scenarios pre-strike, and experts (Gold Institute for International Strategy, Atlantic Council, CFR, Stimson, Foreign Affairs) converge on three broad futures. None are clean.

1. The regime hunkers down and offers a deal ("recalibration" or "IRGCistan"). Surviving clerics/IRGC hardliners close ranks around a new figurehead (e.g., Ali Larijani or a council). They trade verifiable nuclear/missile/proxy concessions for sanctions relief and breathing room. This is the most likely near-term outcome if internal cohesion holds: a battered but intact theocracy, more pragmatic out of necessity, but still repressive. No full "victory," but threats neutered enough for de-escalation. Oil markets stabilize; region breathes—but the underlying ideology festers.

2. Regime fractures and collapses (the high-reward scenario). This comes w/ decapitation plus sustained degradation sparking mass defections, security forces stand down, and protests (building on recent waves) overwhelm remaining loyalists. This is what Trump explicitly called for: "the single greatest chance for the Iranian people to take back their Country." A potential transition vehicle: Exiled Crown Prince Reza Pahlavi has positioned himself as a non-permanent transitional figure. His publicly outlined plan covers the first 100-180 days: stabilize currency/economy, form a National Reconciliation Council, seize state media for transparent messaging, amnesty for non-criminal regime elements, humanitarian corridors, and rapid move to a new secular constitution plus internationally supervised elections. He frames it as "maximum support for the people plus maximum pressure on the regime" to trigger internal tipping points.

Upside: A secular, democratic Iran ends 46 years of theocracy, sponsorship of terror, and nuclear roulette. A regional peace dividend (no more Axis of Resistance funding), economic reopening to Western investment, and a historic win for the Iranian people who've shown in repeated uprisings they reject the regime.

Downside risks: Power vacuum invites ethnic/sectarian score-settling (Kurds, Baloch, Arabs, Azeris), IRGC remnants turning insurgent, refugee waves, or looting of remaining WMD assets. Without boots on the ground, external influence is limited to aid, broadcasting, and diplomacy.

3. Prolonged mess or state failure. This comes w/ a partial collapse without coherent opposition leadership. Instead, it entails militias, warlordism, or civil strife akin to post-2011 Libya (not a full Iraq 2003 redux since no occupation). Proxies flare; Gulf states get dragged in deeper; China/Russia exploit chaos for influence. This is the nightmare that "euphoria" blinds people to... history shows airpower degrades regimes but rarely installs stable successors alone.

The honest strategic bottom line? This isn't 2003 Iraq (no WMD hunt, no nation-building occupation, far better intelligence/preparation, and a population that's already demonstrated anti-regime sentiment). But it's also not a videogame "win screen." Success metrics shift from "bombs dropped" to "threats eliminated plus sustainable outcome." Best, most realistic path: Degrade the regime's coercive machinery enough that Iranians themselves finish the job. The people and not U.S. troops own the sequel. Pahlavi-style transition offers the cleanest off-ramp if momentum builds.

There are many risks to manage. A few are an oil shock to the global oil markets, congressional pushback at home (War Powers debates), escalation ladders, and the eternal post-strike question of "who fills the vacuum?"

These risks also present opportunities. The Islamic Republic has been the region's chief arsonist since 1979. Removing its oxygen (nuclear threshold plus missile terrorism) creates space for something better. Iranians have endured enough (much of the region and the world feel the same); their responses now decide whether this becomes liberation or another cycle.

Euphoria is the adrenaline of a necessary and well landed punch. The "what then" is governance, economics, and reconciliation in a traumatized society. It will be messy, protracted, and must be Iranian led. The strikes bought time and space; whether it's used for a free Iran or muddled through depends on what happens inside Tehran and on the streets in the coming weeks. History favors the bold who also plan for that day!

Iranians in US Consider Air Strikes as Help to Liberate Their Homeland

From California to Washington, D.C., Iranian Americans welcomed the joint U.S.–Israeli military operations against leaders of Iran’s Islamist regime.

By: Janice Hisle and Darlene McCormick Sanchez 2/28/2026
TheEpochTimes.com

Iranian Americans consider U.S.–Israeli military action a big step toward freeing their homeland from an oppressive regime, according to those in multiple U.S. states interviewed by The Epoch Times on Feb. 28, hours after the air strikes on Iran began.

“This is a mission to liberate 90 million people in Iran,” no matter how some media reports might “spin” it, said Sherry Yadegari, who lives in the Atlanta area.

Iranian Americans who spoke with The Epoch Times supported the military strikes. Several mentioned they were hoping for a quick end to the conflict, and lamented civilian casualties. All expressed hope that Iranian citizens might soon gain the freedom that they have long sought.

People were “dancing in the streets,” Yadegari told The Epoch Times, adding that the people were praising President Donald Trump and Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu for their joint operation against Iran. America’s Operation Epic Fury and Israel’s Operation Roaring Lion launched together, a couple hours after dawn in Iran on Feb. 28. Air strikes hit key targets, including weapons sites and the compound of the supreme leader, killing him and many other top officials.

In the U.S. capital, about 200 supporters waved American and Iranian flags, and shouted thanks to President Donald Trump and Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu. A large banner said “Thank you, President Trump,” next to a photo of the president.

During the march from the World War I Memorial Park toward the White House, participants chanted, “USA!” and “Make Iran Great Again.” One sign read, “This is not a war. It’s a rescue mission.”

A separate march in Washington, near the Georgetown neighborhood, drew an even larger crowd later in the day, a video posted on X shows. With this military operation, Trump is fulfilling a pledge he made to help persecuted Iranian protesters on Jan. 13, several interviewees said.

The president encouraged “Iranian patriots” to continue protests that began in late December 2025, even though Iranian government forces were arresting and killing them by the thousands. “Help is on its way,” he pledged at the time.

‘Help Is Here’

Now “help is here, but it is in an early stage,” Ray Sharifi, a California grandfather who was born in Iran, told The Epoch Times. Late Friday night, when he went to bed at his San Diego home, Sharifi had a feeling that the United States might act against Iran. He spotted a news alert flash across his cellphone, confirming the air strikes. That report left him “delighted,” he said. All day Saturday, Sharifi got no sleep as he constantly monitored news reports. Sharifi said Iranian citizens needed outside assistance “to topple these guys, to weaken them. Then, the people can pour into the street again and take their nation back”, he said.

Both Trump and Netanyahu issued statements urging the Iranian people to do that. In a video address, Trump told Iran’s citizenry to remain sheltered until the bombings cease. “When we are finished, take over your government. This will be probably your only chance for generations,” he said. Yadegari concurred; failure to “seize that opportunity” represents her biggest fear about this situation, she said.

Brave Iranian Women Saluted

Saeed Shafiyani-Rad, president of the Iranian Association of Boston, said the nonprofit group cannot take a political stand. But speaking for himself, he said the courage of the Iranian women has touched him the most. “They are the bravest people that I’ve seen so far, and my heart is bleeding for them,” he told The Epoch Times. The women have torn off hijabs, the traditionally required Muslim attire for women, and burned them. They risked their lives with that act of defiance against a regime that forced people to convert to Islam, Shafiyani-Rad said. “And these are beautiful, beautiful young ladies ... they’re sacrificing their life for democracy and freedom in Iran,” he said.

Their stories have been squelched by state-controlled media, Shafiyani-Rad said. But he believes their courageous acts nevertheless will be remembered for many years to come. Publicly opposing the regime, and taking pictures or certain videos, can be punished by prosecution or even death, Shafiyani-Rad said. Meanwhile, citizens are suffering economically, he said, alleging that the regime has stolen the nation’s wealth from the people.

Tears of Joy, Relief

Dina Sheikami, an Iranian from Canada who joined the celebratory march in Washington, said Iranian nationals across the globe were relieved to hear of the Ayatollah’s death. “It was such a significant moment ... because we lost so many beautiful people” during his regime, Sheikami told The Epoch Times.

In response to media interviews with Iranian celebrities, who said Iranians opposed outside intervention, Sheikami said, “It is such a lie.” “We need all the support from all around the world,” she said, from people “who can help us make our wish come true, which is to remove the Islamic regime from power.”

Another marcher in Washington, Shima Safinia, a 31-year-old Iranian who came to the United States in 2017, said she was “crying her eyes out” in relief over the news that the Ayatollah had been eliminated. “I’ve been waiting for this second my whole life,” she told The Epoch Times.

Transition Leader Suggested

Safinia said she and many people in Iran support Reza Pahlavi, son of the deposed Shah of Iran, to become the nation’s new leader during a “transitional period” followed by a vote for a permanent leader. Safinia said she supports his election for that role, too.

Rahm Ahmadi, a 78-year-old Iranian American living in the Dallas area, agreed that the Shah’s son has widespread support. Pahlavi represents one of the political factions with support in Iran, in what is a highly fragmented opposition. Ahmadi said that, before he came to the United States in 1973, his homeland was prosperous and had a lot of freedom under Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi. Iranians are of Persian descent, he said, adding that they and the Israelis share a different heritage than the other Arab nations in the Middle East. It’s been decades since Ahmadi visited Iran. If there is new leadership, he may return once again—for the first time in 23 years.

Epstein, Academia & Transhumanism: An UNBELIEVABLY Dark Agenda

Child sex trafficker Jeffrey Epstein worked with the highest academics in the world to explore transhumanism, “designer babies,” eugenics, genetic engineering of people, and a “horny virus.”

By: Alex Newman 02/19/2026
LibertySentinel.substack.com

With millions of additional pages of documents being released about Jeffrey Epstein’s web, it is becoming clear that he was more than “just” a child sex trafficking monster. The billionaire Deep State operative’s ties to education and academia shed light on one of the most disturbing agendas imaginable.

Indeed, Epstein was a key player in bankrolling a transhumanist nightmare—genetic engineering, human cloning, designer babies, embryo manipulation, eugenics, and even bizarre ideas like a “horny virus.” All of this was funded and discussed under the guise of cutting-edge “science” at elite universities.

His ties to Harvard and Arizona State University (ASU) were clearly not “philanthropy” in the traditional sense. Instead, they were investments in reshaping humanity, often with academics who at the very least turned a blind eye to his crimes — and maybe worse. Newly unsealed email correspondence with academics is beyond troubling.

Harvard: Money, Access, and Eugenics Talk

At Harvard, Epstein funneled over $9 million between 1998 and 2008 to support research and faculty activities. Harvard’s own report confirms the total: $9,179,000, including $6.5 million in 2003 for the Program in Evolutionary Dynamics (PED) under Professor Martin Nowak. “Did you torture her?” Nowak asked Epstein in one especially bizarre email.

It is true that most of the giving occurred before his arrest for horrific child sex crimes. But even post-conviction, Epstein maintained access, visiting Harvard’s PED dozens of times and rubbing shoulders with figures like geneticist George Church, who has spoken openly about engineering “superior” humans.

Epstein’s Harvard network included heavyweights like linguist and far-left academic Noam Chomsky, who served as a fellow at Harvard and taught at MIT and University of Arizona. In one chilling exchange, Epstein pushed Chomsky on race, IQ gaps, and gene editing for traits like working memory—citing James Watson’s downfall for similar views.

The billionaire’s racial and pro-eugenics views are raising eyebrows. “The test score gap amongst African Americans is well documented,” Epstein wrote in an email exchange in which Chomsky discussed how “tempting” a trip to the infamous Epstein island would be. “Making things better might require accepting some uncomfortable facts.” Chomsky responded by suggesting the disparities were likely due to the legacy of racism rather than innate biology and genetics. However, the radical leftwing activist went on to argue that if genes could indeed be altered, priority should go to curbing “dedicated savagery” among those who seek power.

Epstein persisted in pushing for genetically engineering human beings. “Imagine that a set of genes used for working memory... could be found and adjusted,” he wrote. “Not looking seems cruel.” This was part of a broader pattern reflecting Epstein’s obsession with eugenics and genetic “improvement,” a longtime pattern with Deep State elitists.

Other Harvard-linked academics stayed in touch with Epstein post-conviction as well. Theoretical physicist Lisa Randall emailed Epstein casually, asking about his island during a Caribbean trip. “Wow haven’t you had enough house arrest?” she joked. Even Dr. Bernie Steinberg, president of Harvard Hillel, asked for the disgraced pervert’s help raising $25 million for the center while Epstein was still under house arrest.

Meanwhile, writing to Epstein, UCLA Professor of Neurology Mark Tramo discussed whether girls were “cute” or not. Tramo also made a bizarre remark about how “newborns will suck on a pacifier more vigorously if it triggers playback of a recording of her/his mother’s voice than another woman’s voice.”

ASU: Origins Project and the Transhumanist Orbit

It gets weirder. Arizona State University, a key hub for transhumanist research led by U.S. intelligence bigwig Michael Crow who also chairs In-Q-Tel, is the most frequently named academic institution in the newly released Epstein files. The billionaire sex trafficker’s ASU connections centered on physicist Lawrence Krauss and his Origins Project.

Founded in 2008 to probe life’s “big questions,” the Origins Project is involved in cutting-edge but extremely disturbing research into areas ranging from genetics to evolution. Epstein, unsurprisingly, was a major financier of the project, maintaining strong ties with the outfit and its leader Krauss. Indeed, when Krauss faced sexual misconduct allegations leading to his 2018 ouster, he emailed Epstein for advice. Krauss detailed negotiating a voluntary leave. After a brief email exchange, Krauss chimed in: “I wish they would indict Trump or something right now.” Epstein was clearly a key confidante of Krauss.

Epstein’s ties into the ASU-centered research orbit gets even darker — into outright transhumanism. He corresponded frequently with Bryan Bishop, a Bitcoin Core contributor and later CTO at Avanti crypto bank. Bishop pitched Epstein on a “designer baby project,” sharing a deck and proposing it under his banner for “deniability.” “Questions about how serious you are,” Bishop wrote, “regarding your requirements for secrecy and privacy, specifically regarding reputational risk and also any financial involvement.” Epstein responded: “im traveling in mid east until the 1st. lets do it after that, i have no issue with investing the problem is only if i am seen to lead.”

Bishop followed up with a “use of funds” spreadsheet plan for a designer baby and human cloning venture. According to the document, it would cost $1.7 million per year for up to 5 years plus $1 million lab setup. The goal: having the “first live birth of a human designer baby, and possibly a human clone, within 5 years. Once we reach the first birth, everything changes and the world will never be the same again, much less the future of the human species,” Bishop warned the financier, who was on the

The Most Protected Secret in American Power

They Built a Machine to Protect the Powerful and Silence the Victims

Michael T. Flynn LTG USA (RET)
genflynn.substack.com 02/27/2026

The most powerful people in the world shared one secret and they will do anything to make sure you never find out what it is. A deliberate, organized, protected system designed to compromise politicians, financiers, intelligence figures, and media executives. Designed to keep them loyal, complicit, and controllable. This isn't about one man.

Jeffrey Epstein was a mechanism. Who built him, who funded him, and who made sure the investigations kept getting buried?

For decades, the same interconnected class of elites has operated above the law. Moving between government, finance, media, and intelligence with full immunity, full cover, and full confidence that accountability would never reach them. They were right and they are still right. The Epstein network is the clearest window we have ever had into how that system actually functions, and the people inside it are still walking free, still influential, still protected by the same institutions that failed every single victim.

The names in those sealed files are not just names. They are a map. A map of who owes favors to whom, who can be leveraged, who has been compromised, and who has been making decisions about this country's future while carrying secrets that would end their careers and their freedom. These are the people shaping policy, controlling narratives, and deciding what the public is allowed to know. Trust me, they have spent years making sure you never find out.

The American people deserve every name. Every flight log. Every document. Every communication. Unredacted. Unsealed. Public. No exceptions. No carve-outs. No more quiet settlements and sealed records that protect predators and their enablers while their victims are left with nothing.

This is not a partisan issue. Children were victimized on an industrial scale. Justice was systematically obstructed. Powerful people were deliberately shielded. That is not a failure of the system. That is the system working exactly as the people at the top designed it to work. Every politician, every prosecutor, every media figure who has looked the other way, downplayed the story, or helped keep those files sealed is complicit. Say that word out loud. COMPLICIT.

If you believe in the rule of law, you demand full disclosure. If you believe no one is above justice, you demand prosecution. If you believe this country belongs to its people and not to a protected class of predators and their enablers, you demand that every stone gets turned over. No matter whose name is underneath it. No matter how many powerful friends they have. No matter how uncomfortable it makes the institutions that spent years covering for them.

The cover-up is not in the past. It is ongoing. The protection racket is still running. The files are still sealed, the enablers are still free, and every single day that continues is a moral indictment of every person with the power to act who has chosen not to.

The truth does not care how powerful you are. It does not care how many judges you own, how many prosecutors you have silenced, or how many records you have sealed. Truth is not impressed by titles, connections, or net worth. It moves slowly and quietly, yet with absolute certainty. It always finds its way to the top.

The Clintons Finally Testify

By: TFPnews.com Editorial Staff

Donald and Melania may have the White House, but Bill and Hillary just secured the world's most ambitious joint alibi tour. Welcome to TFPnews, where we examine the rare marital miracle in which a couple that remembers every enemies list, every polling crosstab, and every 1990s scandal suddenly cannot recall one very famous billionaire with a private island.

The Amazing Clinton Memory Wipe

Bill Clinton, a man who can recall county-level vote totals from 1992, now bravely testifies that he knew "nothing" about Jeffrey Epstein's crimes and would never have flown on his plane if he'd had any idea what was going on. This is despite flight logs listing him on 26 flight legs on Epstein's jets in the early 2000s—apparently all part of an intensive ignorance-building program at 30,000 feet.

Asked by Congress, Bill explained that, sure, there were planes, trips, photos, and fundraisers, but absolutely no clue about the host's extra-curricular hobbies. He saw no "indications" of wrongdoing—apparently the only person in modern history to visit Epstein's orbit and come away with less information than when he arrived.

Hillary: The Schrödinger's Acquaintance

Then there's Hillary Clinton, who has spent decades being accused of knowing everything about everyone, from Wall Street bankers to small-town librarians, yet now insists she has "no information" on Epstein's crimes and doesn't recall ever meeting him. In Congress, she stated she never had any connection or communication with Epstein and only knew Ghislaine Maxwell "casually," which in D.C. probably means "less than 30 fundraisers together."

Republicans treated her testimony like a live-action true-crime podcast, hoping for one gasp-worthy revelation, but instead got two hours of "I don't recall" and "that's not my area." If selective amnesia were an Olympic sport, the Clinton household would be bringing home the gold, silver, and bronze.

The Joint Defense: Nothing to See Here

In a touching show of marital solidarity, Bill even defended Hillary afterward, stressing that she never traveled with Epstein, never visited his properties, and basically got subpoenaed just for having the last name "Clinton." It was the political equivalent of "she wasn't even there, bro," delivered with that famous Arkansas charm and a brand-new, industrial-strength memory gap. So here we are: Flight logs? Administrative fiction. Photos and social circles? Pure coincidence. Congressional subpoenas? Unfortunate calendar errors.

According to the official Clinton story, America's most networked political couple spent years in the same galaxy as Jeffrey Epstein—and yet somehow managed to know less about him than your average Reddit thread.

For TFPnews, this has been your reminder that in Washington, knowledge is power—unless it might be subpoenaed, in which case knowing nothing is suddenly the hottest bipartisan trend.

payroll of the Rothschild banking dynasty and regularly identified himself as the family's "representative." Epstein replied to the email: "no rush."

Bishop updated Epstein on challenges surrounding CRISPR, a technique for altering genetic code. Citing the 2018 Chinese "CRISPR babies" scandal and certain technical problems with engineering babies, he touted a new embryo-editing technique that is "more similar to cloning." Epstein responded enthusiastically: "great." In another note, Epstein said he favored "implant embryo, wait 9 months.. great ending."

Epstein even queried Bitcoin developer Jeremy Rubin about Bishop and his plans: "Bryan Bishop wants to talk to me. Do you know him?" Rubin responded: "Yeah I do. He's a smart guy, quirky though. Does a mix of Bitcoin things and dna data storage."

Beyond babies, Epstein explored fringe biotech. With Stanford visiting professor Nathan Wolfe, he discussed a "horny virus" idea involving sexual behavior. Wolfe pushed for funding to do a study on it. Epstein also corresponded with

Harvard statistician Donald Bruce Rubin about the possibility of "female Viagra" and investment in "Emotional Brain."

This all ties back to ASU's Michael Crow—In-Q-Tel ties, pandemic simulations, biodigital convergence—as I discussed in detail with researcher and forensic accountant Kristen Williamson in 2023 Epstein's funding helped grease the wheels for transhumanist research blending genetics, Artificial Intelligence, and control. [Video link at TFPnews.com]

As more and more explosive information emerges from the Department of Justice, it is becoming clear that Epstein's interest in academia and "education" was extremely significant. Universities provided cover; Epstein provided cash and vision. What has been learned so far is just the tip of the iceberg.

This elitist network and the sick research Epstein was involved with are not progress or philanthropy. Epstein and those he worked with are seeking to play God with humanity's future. It must be exposed and those involved — from academia to politics — must be held accountable, before these would-be masters of humanity unleash hell on Earth.

Epstein Files: An Opportunity for Libertarians

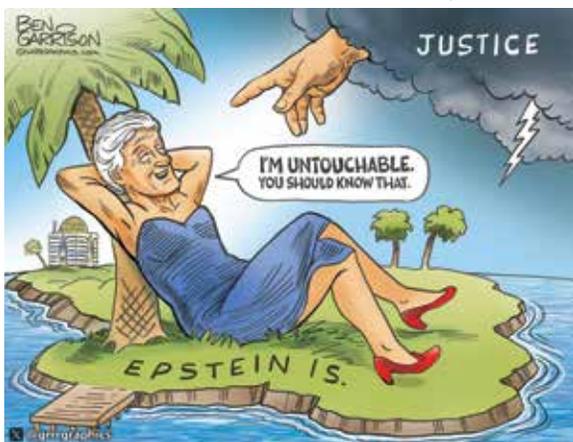

By Ron Paul | Feb 23, 2026
RonPaulInstitute.org

Those who have examined the Epstein files have seen information about how connected Jeffrey Epstein was to members of the political, business, and academic elites. Many of these connections started after Epstein's 2008 conviction.

The Epstein files support claims that Epstein worked with intelligence agencies, in particular Israel's Mossad and the American CIA. Yet the mainstream media and most politicians seem uninterested in whether Epstein used underage girls in a scheme to blackmail powerful individuals on behalf of intelligence agencies. Fortunately, the alternative media is not afraid to discuss Epstein's intelligence connections or any other matters related to Epstein, including suspicious circumstances surrounding his death.

The Epstein files and the Justice Department's failure to let the people see the full files present an opportunity for libertarians. The belief that government agencies used the sexual abuse of children as a means of ensuring rich and powerful people did their bidding will increase distrust of government and the interests that profit from, and often control, the state. The Trump administration's failure to release the files until forced to by Congress will further increase the distrust of the government.

This distrust can lead to support for liberty if those of us who know the truth explain that the problem is a government that tries to run the economy, run the world, and run our lives. This type of government will inevitably attract unscrupulous individuals. Therefore, the solution is to limit the government's power. The first step is to build a critical mass of people committed to restoring liberty and able to see through the propaganda used to convince us that the government is taking our liberty for our own good.

Following the Watergate scandal, Murray Rothbard wrote that, "Watergate gives us the greatest single hope for the short-run victory of liberty in America. For Watergate, as politicians have been warning us ever since, destroyed the public's 'faith in government' — and it was high time, too." Unfortunately, the people's distrust in government did not last. However, Representative Thomas Massie, who is leading the fight to make the files public, has argued that abusing minors in order to blackmail wealthy and powerful individuals, along with the refusal to expose the full truth about these horrific crimes, is bigger than Watergate.

The controversy over the Epstein files comes at a time when the US is on the verge of an economic crisis. This crisis is rooted in President Nixon's 1971 abandonment of the last link between the dollar and gold, giving the United States a purely fiat currency. This fiat money system, combined with the dollar's reserve currency status, made it possible for the government to run up huge debts. Today the federal debt is almost 39 trillion dollars and is increasing quickly. This exploding debt, along with resentment of America's hyper-interventionist foreign policy, is leading to increased international support for abandoning the dollar. These factors all suggest that the next crash could end the welfare-warfare-fiat currency system.

If those of us who know the truth can take advantage of the growing distrust of government to further spread the ideas of liberty, the next crisis may lead to a return to limited constitutional government, liberty, and peace.

Afghanistan Bombs Pakistan Cities, Intense Fighting Erupts

Pakistan carries out airstrikes on Kabul, Kandahar, Jalalabad, and Paktia with major fighting along the Durand Line.

David Obelcz 02/26/2026
DavidObelcz.substack.com

An Afghan Taliban military convoy advances in the direction of the Pakistan border as intense fighting erupts. Fighting between Pakistan and Afghanistan exploded after a month of increasing tensions and escalating attacks along the disputed Durand Line, reportedly killing more than 100 soldiers.

In the early morning hours of Wednesday, Afghanistan launched what it called a major offensive across a wide front on the Afghanistan border. A Taliban military official called the operation targeting the Kumar and Nangarhar provinces a “revenge attack” for earlier airstrikes on seven Afghan villages.

The Taliban government in Kabul reported 55 Pakistani soldiers had been killed, and 19 military outposts in Pakistan had been captured. In response, Pakistan’s Defence Minister Khawaja Asif announced the launch of Operation Ghazab Lil Haq, calling it a “crushing response” to Afghanistan Taliban aggression. Pakistan’s state-controlled news agency PTV claimed 58 Afghan soldiers were killed and 30 pieces of heavy equipment, including artillery, tanks, and armored personnel carriers, were destroyed. We could not independently verify any of the casualty claims.

In a televised statement, Pakistan’s President Asif Ali Zardari said, “Pakistan will not compromise on peace & territorial integrity. Our armed forces’ response is comprehensive and decisive. Those who mistake our peace for weakness will face a strong response, and no one will be beyond reach.”

A video from Pakistan’s Ministry of Defense showed an ammunition depot being hit by an airstrike in Jalalabad. Another video showed the Afghan border guard post at Kharlachi destroyed by a tank firing at point-blank range. Heavy fighting was also reported at the Torkham border checkpoint. A video recorded in Kabul, Afghanistan, showed a large fire burning on the horizon as multiple airstrikes rocked the city.

The renewed fighting started after the Islamic State Khorasan Province (ISIS-K) took responsibility for a February 6 suicide bombing at a Shite Muslim mosque in Islamabad, Pakistan. ISIS-K claimed responsibility for the attack that killed more than 30 and wounded almost 200. Pakistani security forces arrested four suspects connected to the attack.

ISIS-K is an offshoot of the ISIS Caliphate that was in Syria and Iran in the 2010s, and is based in Afghanistan. The group views the Afghan Taliban government as enemies.

On February 16, the Tehreek-e-Taliban Pakistan (TTP) terror group carried out a car bombing at a security checkpoint in the Bajaur District of Pakistan, followed by an armed ambush. Eleven police officers and one civilian child were killed, and 17 other people were wounded. TTP claimed responsibility for the attack.

Bajaur is in Khyber Pakhtunkhwa, a stronghold of TTP. The terror group is separate from the Afghan Taliban, but is widely believed to be supported by Kabul as a proxy force. The Pakistani Foreign Ministry summoned the Afghan deputy head of mission in Islamabad on February 19 and delivered a demarche protesting TTP militants using Afghan territory for training and support. In a statement, the Ministry warned that Pakistan “reserves the right to respond and eliminate any [TTP]... wherever they are located.”

On February 22nd, Pakistan’s Information Ministry reported that “seven camps belonging to militants it blames for a recent series of deadly attacks” were targets of “selective operations.”

According to Afghan officials, 18 people were killed, including women and children, in Girdi Kas. There was heavy fighting in the same areas 13 months ago, with nuclear-armed Pakistan threatening to use its arsenal against Afghanistan. Negotiations led to a shaky ceasefire.

Pakistan and its rival India have massive state-run and privately controlled media influence and disinformation operations, making it challenging to verify information from this region.

The Executive Order Everyone Misread

By Tracy Beanz & Michelle Edwards 02/23/2026
TheHighWire.com

On February 18, 2026, President Trump signed an executive order (EO) treating elemental phosphorus and glyphosate-based herbicides like supply-chain vulnerabilities. Why? Because, in the administration's framing, they are. Following the EO, sheer panic ensued over an order that people apparently briefly skimmed, and over one word they hate. The order, which leans on the Defense Production Act of 1950, delegates priority-allocation authority to the USDA to ensure "a continued and adequate supply" of both phosphorus and glyphosate and explicitly ties them to defense readiness and food-supply security. Currently importing elemental phosphorus from other countries each year, the order plainly states that US domestic production is extremely limited, with only one domestic producer that is unable to meet annual demand. In reality, the EO, which is more about elemental phosphorus than it is glyphosate, reads less like a permanent stamp of approval to chemicals in our food and more like a national-security procurement memo that has inadvertently set the MAHA movement on fire.

Specifically, the part that set the internet on fire centers around the words "glyphosate" and "immunity." The EO plainly states, "This order confers all immunity provided in section 707 of the Act (50 U.S.C. 4557)." Sure, that sounds ominous until you look at what that statute actually spells out, which is that its liability protection for damages or penalties arising from compliance with a DPA rule/regulation/order, even if the rule is later found invalid. In other words, Trump's EO is not a magic immunity shield against product liability or cancer claims related to glyphosate. No indeed. Instead, it's a compliance shield that prevents a company from being punished simply for prioritizing a federal order over ordinary contracts.

That's why Zen Honeycutt (speaking through her work with Moms Across America) has pushed the same core clarification: narrow DPA immunity is being misread as blanket immunity. Yet these are two very different things.

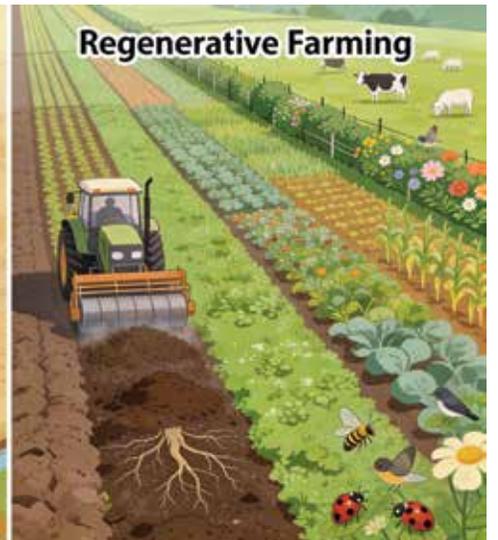

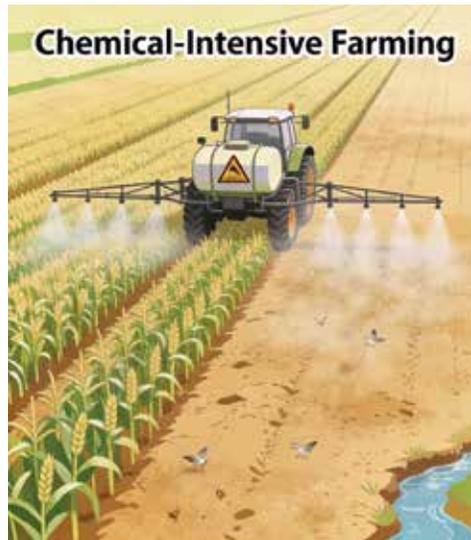

Understandably, the immediate and harsh backlash from MAHA makes political sense. Clearly, people are reacting as if the EO settles the debate in favor of glyphosate. The dire mood is as if the Trump administration suddenly decided to permanently stamp SAFE on glyphosate. But that is not what the EO does. Again, it is an access and supply decision, not a health verdict. That distinction matters because the health argument is still heavily contested in real time, and the public has decades of reasons to distrust how the toxins making us sick get labeled as "safe."

At this moment, to be clear, we must remain firmly anti-glyphosate. It needs to be out of our food. Permanently. But we don't have to turn anti-farmer or anti-Trump because of the executive order. Sadly, the hideous truth is that—thanks to decades of corruption—America has built a dependency on chemicals that runs so deep it now looks like "how farming works." The toxic model is not only farmers making choices; it's an entire incentive architecture that rewards monocrops, predictable yields, and input-heavy stability. All thanks to poisons and corporate greed. The quiet enforcer isn't a person in a lab coat—it's the checkbook.

corporate giants—Monsanto and Bayer chief among them—while the public, which has been unknowingly subjected to toxins at every turn, is left arguing about whether poison is "safe in small amounts."

The "small amounts" debate is part of the trap. Regulators often evaluate the active ingredient as if the product in the real world is just that ingredient. But farmers and homeowners don't spray "glyphosate in a vacuum." They spray formulations—like

What are we talking about? For starters, federal crop insurance is one of the biggest stabilizers of the current system: in CBO's February 2026 baseline, total crop insurance program spending is projected around the mid-teens billions per year (roughly ~$14.7B to ~$16.1B across 2026–2036 BA, with outlays swinging year to year), and the federal government pays roughly 67% of producer premiums on average. That's not "neutral." That's a set of rails. When the rails are built around today's dominant commodity patterns, the system quietly punishes anyone trying to transition off the chemical treadmill.

Roundup—which include co-formulants and surfactants that can alter toxicity and biological effects. Peer-reviewed work has repeatedly shown that glyphosate-based herbicide formulations can produce stronger biological disruptions than glyphosate alone at equivalent doses, and that surfactants are a plausible contributor. Europe went so far as to exclude a specific co-formulant—POE-tallowamine (a POEA surfactant)—from glyphosate plant-protection products. That doesn't "prove" every health claim, but it does validate the public's instinct that "glyphosate" and "Roundup" are not interchangeable words.

Indeed, the current scenario we face can be both understandable in intent and disgusting in its consequences. A conservative can look at the world as it is: global supply chains get weaponized, critical minerals get squeezed, and food security is national security. But a sane person can also look at what we've normalized: chemical farming made fortunes for the companies that sell the inputs and the storylines, from the old oil-and-chemical era to today's

Of course, there's more. The glyphosate dependency also runs through seeds. USDA Economic Research Service reports that adoption of genetically engineered crops is now the norm for major commodities in the United States, including herbicide-tolerant traits in corn, soybeans, and cotton. That matters a lot because the modern model isn't just "spray weeds" with poisons. Instead, it is a paired system of herbicide tolerant crops plus broad-spectrum herbicides. Thus, when critics say, “just ban glyphosate” (which must be the ultimate goal), we are not morally wrong. But that stance ignores the mechanical reality that America’s dominant cropping system has been designed around the use of poisons. Pulling the chemical oversight in one swoop won’t just change one input. It would detonate the entire operating system.

So, this explains why HHS Secretary Robert F. Kennedy, Jr., in his February 12 conversation with Theo Von, framed the problem to illustrate the reality in which the majority of farmers currently live. Meaning, our nation is dependent on something it suspects is making us sick, and the question is how to transition off of that toxic path without putting farmers out of business. Kennedy shared that he is studying emerging alternatives—like laser-based weed control—as the “off-ramp” logic: build replacement capacity first, then exit. We must stop here and realize what is happening, because it is a rare moment where the MAHA instinct (stop poisoning people) and the national-interest instinct (don’t collapse domestic agriculture) can actually exist in the same sentence without either one of them lying.

If the public wants a reason to be suspicious anyway, it’s not paranoia because it’s ingrained in the history of our nation’s food supply. To many, this is exactly why the EO is so upsetting. The fraud is overwhelming. Case in point, the Industrial Bio-Test Laboratories scandal is the kind of incident that permanently scars trust in the regulatory supply chain. This debacle involved major chemical testing fraud in the 1970s, federal investigations, and convictions that forced regulators and companies to retest chemicals whose approvals relied on compromised studies. This is not OK. Americans are not here to be experimented on by greedy corporations. More recently, researchers have revisited the broader theme of this corruption—how corporate influence and compromised science can shape what the government believes it “knows.” The point isn’t that every glyphosate study is fake. Bottom line—the system has rightly earned the public’s raised eyebrow and general distrust.

So where does that leave the exhausted American who is pro-Trump, pro-MAGA, but not pro-glyphosate? It leaves them, frankly, in a place that is more adult than the internet. The executive order is a supply-chain move—phosphorus, production capacity, defense, and food security—written in the language of the DPA. To be clear, the immunity clause is real but narrow. It is tied to compliance with the order, not a blanket pardon for toxic tort claims. The MAHA panic is emotionally rational because people have been trained—by decades of corporate behavior—to hear “government protection” and assume “corporate impunity.” But wait.

There’s a bigger fight worth having than last week’s outrage news cycle. To be clear, the real battle is the fact that the structural “lock-in” of the food system in the United States must be dismantled. It won’t happen overnight. Think about it. For decades, our farm economy (weed control, seeds, harvesting, and so on) has been engineered around chemical dependence. Then, it has been stabilized by policy and insurance so thoroughly that the exit ramps require actual invention, funding, and political courage. In other words, the entire system must be completely re-imagined.

This crucial key point is exactly why the most useful version of this story doesn’t end with “Trump betrayed MAHA” or “MAHA is overreacting.” It ends with a harder truth: America can’t just denounce the chemical treadmill of glyphosate; it has to replace it. That means building the off-ramps Kennedy described, and it also means calling the bluff of “this is just how farming works” by reforming the incentives that made it that way—because when crop insurance and commodity policy reward the status quo at massive scale, the status quo isn’t an accident. It’s the intended design.

Federal Judge Rules IRS Illegally Shared Taxpayer Data With ICE

The ruling comes after an IRS official issued a sworn statement that tens of thousands of taxpayers' data was shared.

By: Jack Phillips 02/27/2026
TheEpochTimes.com

A federal judge on Feb. 26 ruled that the IRS acted illegally by disclosing taxpayer information to Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE). U.S. District Judge Colleen Kollar-Kotelly said the IRS erred when it shared the taxpayer information with ICE and the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) as part of an agreement between the two agencies in a bid to identify illegal immigrants.

Earlier in February, an IRS official, Dottie Romo, issued a sworn statement saying the IRS provided the information for about 47,000 taxpayers to DHS, which had requested the information of a total of 1.28 million people.

In Thursday's 13-page opinion, Kollar-Kelly cited Romo's statement as part of her ruling against the two agencies, calling it a "significant development" in the case. The judge wrote that the IRS violated a confidentiality law "approximately 42,695 times by disclosing last known taxpayer addresses to ICE."

The IRS had given "confidential taxpayer addresses to ICE in response to requests from ICE that the IRS now admits were legally deficient. The Court's prior decision to indicate that it would supplement the record on appeal with the Romo Declaration reflects the significance of this new information," she wrote.

"In other words, the IRS not only failed to ensure that ICE's request for confidential taxpayer address information met the statutory requirements, but this failure led the IRS to disclose confidential taxpayer addresses to ICE in situations where ICE's request for that information was patently deficient."

In a filing in mid-February, Romo wrote that the IRS had told DHS in January to take steps to "prevent the disclosure or dissemination, and to ensure appropriate disposal, of any data provided to ICE by IRS based on incomplete or insufficient address information" and that the agency also requested DHS's assistance in moving to remediate the matter.

"DHS and ICE have confirmed to the Treasury and IRS that they will comply with federal law and the MOU in addressing this data issue," Romo added in the sworn statement, using an acronym for a memorandum of understanding between the two agencies.

The agencies have agreed they "will not inspect, view, use, copy, distribute, rely on, or otherwise act on any return information that has been obtained from or disclosed by IRS pursuant to the MOU."

In November, Kollar-Kotelly blocked the data-sharing agreement between ICE and the IRS, which the Trump administration had proposed. A data-sharing agreement signed last April by Treasury Secretary Scott Bessent and Homeland Security Secretary Kristi Noem allowed ICE to submit names and addresses of illegal immigrants inside the United States to the IRS for cross-verification against tax records.

Earlier this week, a three-judge panel for the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit declined to issue a preliminary injunction for the immigrants' rights group, Centro de Trabajadores Unidos, and other nonprofits that are suing the federal government to stop implementation of the IRS-ICE agreement.

In declining the preliminary injunction request, Judge Harry Edwards wrote that the nonprofit groups "are unlikely to succeed on the merits of their claim," since the information the agencies are sharing isn't covered by the IRS privacy statute.

The Substitution of a Tariff for the Income Tax Would Re-Create Free Americans

By: Paul Craig Roberts
PaulCraigRoberts.org 02/28/2026

On February 25, I wrote that the most important part of President Trump's State of the Union address was the refusal of Democrats to stand if they agreed with his statement: "the first duty of the American government is to protect American citizens, not illegal aliens."

Actually, there is an equally important element in his address, perhaps more important, and that is President Trump's statement that tariffs would eventually replace the system of income taxation.

This is perhaps the most important sentence ever stated in a state of the union address. As far as I can tell, the only attention it received was that the Supreme Court had recently invalidated Trump's tariffs.

As I have pointed out for decades to no avail—not even libertarians have noticed—the income tax enacted in 1913 converted free Americans into serfs or slaves. The reason I can say this is that the historical definition of a free person is a person who owns his own labor. Serfs and slaves do not own their own labor. Serfs owed a portion of their labor to their feudal lord. Normally it did not exceed 30% of their labor. Slaves owed 50% of their labor to their owners, the other half of their labor going to their own maintenance as an effective and loyal workforce.

There is no way around the fact that the historical definition of a free person is a person who owns his own labor. The land enclosures freed serfs from their obligation to feudal Lords, and created a labor market in which untaxed wages were paid to laborers for their labor. Free men appeared once they owned their own labor and sold it at market wages.

The income tax that passed in 1913 did not materially enserf or enslave Americans, because the tax rate was so low and applied to such a tiny percentage of incomes that it had no material effect. That is how they got it in place. Once in place, the income tax grew quickly, both up in the tax rate and broadly in the percentage of the population subject to income taxation. By the time of the John F Kennedy administration the tax rate on middle income Americans exceeded the tax rate on the labor of medieval serfs, and the tax rate on upper incomes exceeded the tax rate on 19th century slaves on American cotton and tobacco plantations.

The Kennedy tax rate reductions were not indexed, so by the time of the Reagan administration the tax rates again exceeded those on medieval serfs and 19th century slaves. The Reagan administration indexed the new tax rates, and this has held the appropriation of the labor of the middle class to that appropriated by feudal lords. For the upper income class, the official tax rate is higher than that on medieval serfs, but there are methods depending on the economic activities of the upper income class that keep the tax rates for some of them below that of medieval serfs. Regardless, the upper class does not own all of its own labor and is no more free than the lower class.

A tariff is a tax on your purchases, not on your labor. If you purchase domestic products made from domestic resources, you do not have to pay the tariff. If you purchase imported goods or domestic goods made partially from imported products, you pay a tariff based on the content of foreign input in to the product. The purpose of tariffs is to protect domestic production from foreign competition, not as Trump uses them to bludgeon foreign countries to obey his orders.

Tariffs are in effect a consumption tax, not a tax on labor and capital. Therefore, a country with a consumption tax instead of an income tax will have higher growth and higher living standards.

All of this completely obvious and correct information has been ignored in the United States since 1913, a period of 113 years. For over a century American GDP and personal incomes have been held down by the liberals and leftists who have the outlook of communists and prefer equal incomes in poverty to higher incomes with inequality.

It is extraordinary that Donald Trump, a real estate developer, understands this, but the American Economic Association is incapable, being brainwashed as it is by a century of indoctrination.

When you read economists, you learn that their only concern about the income tax is that it is fair. By fair, they mean that it must fall heaviest on the higher incomes. A flat tax rate that taxes everyone at the same rate, which seems consistent with the Constitutional mandate of equal treatment under the law, is considered unfair. The fact that a tax on income means that the taxpayer has lost his freedom and now owes part of his labor to the government, the equivalent of a feudal lord or 19th century plantation owner, is beyond the comprehension of economists.

The consequence is that we will remain serfs and slaves with only a partial ownership of our own labor.

The SAVE Act: A Totalitarian Trojan Horse

By: TFPnews.com Editorial Staff

The SAVE Act is being marketed as a commonsense safeguard against non-citizens voting, but its deeper architecture points toward something far more dangerous: a permanent federal grip on elections and the quiet rollout of a de facto national ID system.

Sold as Security, Built for Control

On April 10, 2025, the U.S. House passed H.R. 22, the “Safeguard American Voter Eligibility (SAVE) Act,” with backers insisting it is needed to keep non-citizens from corrupting the ballot box. Supporters describe it as a narrow, targeted fix: simply requiring documentary proof of citizenship for voter registration by amending the 1993 National Voter Registration Act, better known as Motor Voter. That framing resonates with many Americans who are rightly angry about election fraud and a broken border system.

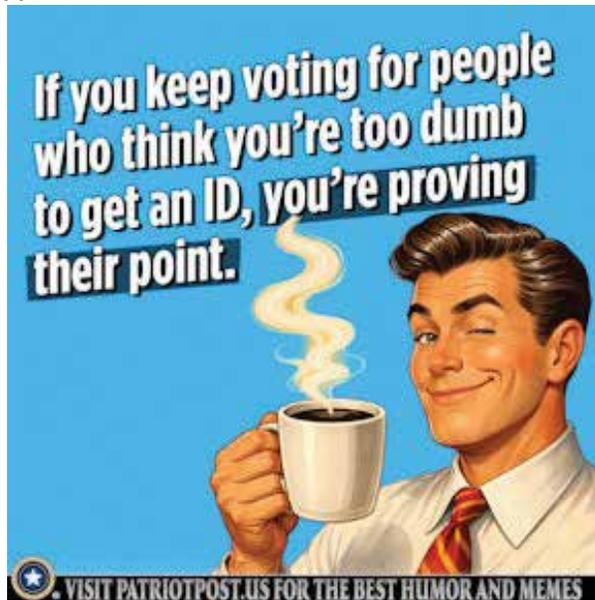

History teaches that the government rarely creates new powers and then leaves them on the shelf. “Emergency” tools tend to become permanent fixtures, and safeguards meant for one narrow purpose often become the backbone of much broader surveillance and control. Patrick Henry’s warning—“Guard with jealous attention the public liberty. Suspect everyone who approaches that jewel.”—is not a quaint relic; it is a direct rebuke to bills exactly like this one.

The Trojan Horse Inside the Bill

The most alarming feature of the SAVE Act is not what its press releases highlight, but what its machinery enables: a nationalized system to verify and track every eligible voter, tied to documentary proof that will necessarily be standardized and easily cross-referenced across federal databases. Once Washington conditions voter eligibility on federally approved documents, it has taken a giant step toward a nationwide ID regime in all but name. A system built to “prove” citizenship for voting can be effortlessly repurposed to “prove” identity for work, travel, banking, firearms purchases, healthcare, and any future “public health” or “climate” mandates.

This dynamic is not hypothetical. For decades, establishment voices on both the Left and the neo-conservative Right have floated various forms of “secure ID” and “e-verification” as tools to manage everything from immigration to domestic security.

Each time, resistance has been strongest when the proposal is clearly labeled as a national ID. The SAVE Act sidesteps that backlash by embedding the same infrastructure in the emotionally charged issue of election integrity.

Federal Elections by Federal Permission

The Constitution leaves the core responsibility for running elections with the states, which is why attempts to federalize election rules have always been a flashpoint. By tying voter registration to federal documentary standards and enforcement mechanisms, the SAVE Act nudges America away from that design and toward nationalized elections in all but form. The more Washington dictates who may register and under what proofs, the less meaningful state control becomes.

In practice, federal agencies and bureaucrats will become the arbiters of what counts as valid proof of citizenship, how those documents must be formatted, and how data must be shared and stored. That means centralized databases, uniform digital identifiers, and federal oversight over local officials who dare to deviate. The same political class that weaponized agencies against dissidents, parents at school board meetings, and whistleblowers will gain yet another lever over the most basic act of self-government: casting a ballot.

From “Non-Citizen Voting” to Everyone, Everywhere

Every power granted to the government must be judged not only by what your favorite politician might do with it today, but by what your worst political enemy can do with it tomorrow. Even if one accepts the stated goal of preventing non-citizens from voting, the SAVE Act does not confine its tools to that narrow purpose. Once an integrated federal verification system exists, it can be used:

-To purge voter rolls in ways that disproportionately target disfavored demographics or regions.

-To impose ever-tightening ID and compliance requirements that bureaucrats, not citizens, interpret and enforce.

-To link voting status with broader government data, from tax records to healthcare and gun ownership.

At that point, the ballot is no longer a shield against centralized power; it becomes one more checkpoint inside a sprawling, data-driven surveillance grid. The rhetoric of “saving” the vote becomes the rationale for scripting and policing the electorate itself.

Liberty Requires Saying No

The core problem with the SAVE Act is not that election integrity is unimportant, but that it uses a legitimate concern to smuggle in illegitimate power. A people jealous of their liberty must resist every attempt to trade away local control and personal privacy for the illusion of federal protection. Real election reform focuses on transparency, paper ballots, local accountability, and rigorous enforcement of existing laws—not on building national databases and document regimes that future tyrants will inevitably exploit.

The question before Americans is simple: Do we want a republic in which sovereign states and free citizens manage their own elections, or a managed democracy in which Washington decides who can vote, under what conditions, and with what papers? The SAVE Act moves decisively toward the latter. For those who still cherish constitutional limits and individual dignity, that should be reason enough to reject this totalitarian Trojan horse at the gate.

Another Drug Lord Killed. Is the Drug War Now Over?

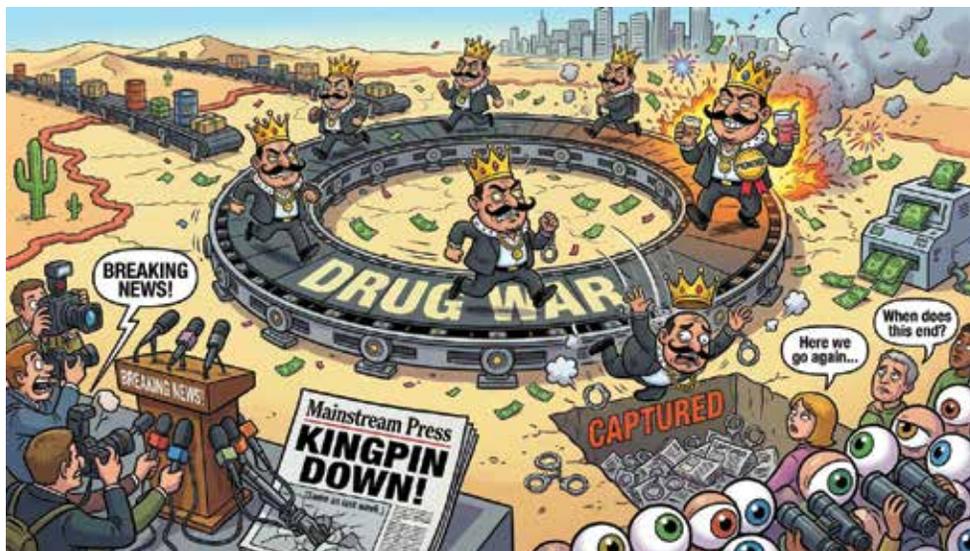

By: Jacob G. Hornberger
RonPaulInstitute.org 02/24/2026

I can't help but laugh every time I read an account in the mainstream press about how a big drug kingpin has just been killed or captured. Mainstream-press reporters and editorial writers get so excited over the death or capture that they become almost giddy. Their mindset is: "Finally — finally! — we are making progress in the drug war!" Why do I laugh when I see that? Because it is so dumb — so idiotic. How can anyone really buy into this nonsense? I figure it's a real testament to public schooling's ability to adversely affect people's minds.

How can these people not see that this nonsense has been going on for decades? How can they not see that this is just a racket — a decades-long, never-ending, ongoing, perpetual racket being perpetrated by U.S. officials?

The latest example of this idiocy is the Mexican government's killing of a drug lord named Nemesio Oseguera Cervantes, also known as "El Mencho," who the New York Times describes today in a front-page article as "one of the world's most powerful drug lords." His killing, according to the Times, "dealt a major blow to the Jalisco New Generation Cartel."

Wow! A "major blow"! Imagine that! Does that mean that the drug war is finally over? Well, not exactly. Instead, it's just another reason why it will go on and on and on. In fact, the killing has just unleashed a massive campaign of retaliatory violence in Puerto Vallarta and Guadalajara, which means that the Mexican government will now need to crack down on those angry drug-war gang members who are still part of the cartel that El Mencho headed up.

To the Times's credit, the article does point out the following truth: Since the United States began its war on drugs nearly six decades ago, multiple drug lords have been arrested or killed and cartels have been dismantled. Yet more people around the world are using drugs than ever. An estimated 25 million people used cocaine worldwide in 2023 — up from 17 million a decade earlier, according to a United Nations report released last year. One thing is for sure: No killing or capture of any drug lord ever means — or will ever mean — the end of the drug war. It will just keep going on and on.

Take a look at the photograph that accompanies this article. It is a photograph of the body of a drug kingpin named Pablo Escobar. He was the "El Mencho" of his day, which was back in the 1980s and 1990s. Notice the happy looks on the Columbian drug warriors who were responsible for killing Escobar. Those drug warriors were as happy as today's drug warriors are about killing "El Mencho."

If you have never seen Netflix's series Narcos, I highly recommend it. It revolves around the Pablo Escobar phenomenon. By the time you finish it, you will realize three important things: (1) That even though the drug warriors got Escobar, other drug gangs quickly moved in to take over his share of the drug trade; 2) the killing of Escobar led to even more drug-war violence; and (3) the drug war just kept going on and on. In other words, killing Escobar accomplished nothing — except for killing Escobar. It's the same with killing El Mencho. More violence. More deaths. More drug war.

Once you finish watching Narcos, I highly recommend watching Narcos: Mexico. It is as good as Narcos. It revolves around a U.S. drug agent named Kiki Camarena. As a U.S. drug agent, he was working to win the drug war in Mexico, where drug lords kidnapped, tortured, and executed him. That was in 1985. Yes, 41 years ago!

What did Camarena die for? Nothing! Absolutely nothing. Even though U.S. drug officials retaliated against Mexican drug gangs (and even recently secured the extradition of a drug lord who was allegedly responsible for what happened to Camarena), the drug war just kept going on and on.

As most everyone knows, the drug war has been a major factor in the destruction of civil liberties and privacy, including financial privacy, here in the United States. At the same time, the drug war — and the violence that came with it — ended up destroying Mexico.

As we have been saying here at The Future of Freedom Foundation for 36 years, there is one — and only one — way to get rid of drug lords and the black-market violence that comes with them. That one way is drug legalization. With drug legalization, the drug lords and drug-war violence disappear immediately. So does the decades-old, ongoing, never-ending, perpetual drug-war racket.

Reprinted with permission from Future of Freedom Foundation.

[TFPF Editorial Note: The elephant in the room that is not discussed in this article is the absolute need to address the larger problem of dealing with the addiction crises. Eliminate the desire for the drugs and the drug lords all go away!]

Trauma Based Mind Control

By: Greg Reese
02/04/2026
GregReese.substack.com

In the early nineteen-hundreds, French psychologist Pierre Janet, studied what he called, “désagrégation,” the splitting of consciousness under trauma. Janet studied several patients whose traumatic histories had led to what modern science calls, Multiple Personality Disorder.

Severe trauma in childhood can fragment the mind into different parts, known as “alters.” The purpose of the alter is to spare the individual the trauma, so the individual consciousness is unaware of the alter, they exist separately.

According to history, this has been understood for millennia and these alters can be programmed and trained, and can hold information inaccessible to the core personality. You can trace this knowledge all the way back to the Egyptian Mystery Schools, to the Knights Templar, and through all the various Secret Societies that followed. The neurological research has shown that the alters are different people with different brain activation patterns, autonomic responses, visual acuity, and allergic responses. Some alters speak languages that the individual can't. This explains why these alters were seen as demonic possession in the past, and why many still see it that way.

Government studies on combat veterans after World War One showed that extreme stress can produce amnesia and identity disruption. During World War Two, Dr. Josef Mengele experimented with traumatizing children, and beginning in 1945 with Operation Paperclip, the United States began recruiting several scientists involved in this research into the CIA.

The CIA's Project BLUEBIRD attempted to create amnesia in people with hypnosis, drugs and electroshock. This continued with Project ARTICHOKE where the CIA added sensory deprivation and forced morphine addiction. A 1952 memo shows they were looking to see if a person could be made into an unwitting assassin. In the MKULTRA program, the CIA added a psychological trauma they called “psychic driving,” often administered while the person was under the influence of LSD, and with Project MKOFTEN, the CIA began experimenting with demonic possession and looking into occult rituals that could influence behavior.

According to scores of victims, many of whom have mysteriously died or disappeared, the world stage is cast with psychotic victims of trauma based mind control with multiple personalities who do exactly what they are told.

Lieutenant Colonel Michael Aquino of the U.S. Army's Psychological Operations, who founded the satanic Temple of Set in 1975, and managed to get it listed in the U.S. Army Chaplain's Handbook, published a paper in 1980, “From PSYOP to MindWar: The Psychology of Victory,” that suggested targeting the domestic population with ELF waves and any other type of technology available that could control behavior. There is a Trauma-Based-Mind-Control-lite version for the entire population, known as, Affective Management and Crisis Capitalization. Strategies of using stress and fear to induce regression and make the population dependent on authority figures or comfort objects.

Terror Management Theory has demonstrated that when subjects were shown imagery of death or disasters, they were more likely to vote for authoritative leaders who promised safety and purchase luxury items they didn't need.

A frightened population demands more policing, they tolerate more surveillance, and they prefer to stay indoors. When the population is subjected to mass trauma, they fall into a state of collective dissociation, and unpopular policies are pushed through that would not be accepted by a logical thinking mental state. Like the Patriot Act, or a governmental system run by Artificial Intelligence.

One Solution for PTSD: Acupuncture

TFPnews.com Editorial Staff

Acupuncture can help people healing from trauma and fear (when delivered by a licensed, experienced practitioner) by calming the body's stress system and helping to normalize cortisol, rather than simply “clearing” it like a toxin. For many survivors, this gentle rebalancing can ease the constant sense of alarm that so often lingers after trauma.

Trauma often leaves the nervous system stuck in high alert, with cortisol and adrenaline rising too easily and staying elevated longer. This pattern underlies anxiety, hypervigilance, and flashbacks. Research suggests acupuncture may soften this over-pumped response by influencing brain and neuroendocrine pathways linked to fear and threat processing.

Studies of auricular and body acupuncture have found reductions in saliva cortisol after repeated sessions, indicating better regulation of the HPA axis. This means cortisol levels are more likely to match the situation, not flood the body in safe moments. For trauma survivors, that can mean fewer sudden spikes of fear, calmer nights, and stronger grounding. This is true for anyone suffering not only from PTSD but from anxiety, depression, ADHD, stress, sleep, and associated symptoms.

A skilled, licensed practitioner makes a crucial difference. They can tailor each session to avoid overwhelming a sensitive nervous system, choosing gentler points, pacing, and techniques that prioritize safety.

There is Something Terribly, Horribly Wrong With the Current Crop of Democrats

Who are these people, heckling Trump, and refusing to stand for America's heroes?

Patricia McCarthy 02/25/2026
www.AmericanThinker.com

There is something terribly, horribly wrong with the current crop of Democrats. This was true before Trump's State of the Union (SOTU) speech Tuesday night, but their behavior during and outside of it further exposed the death of any loyalty they ever had to this nation.

They behaved badly during last year's SOTU, refusing to stand for the victims of illegal migrant murders or the little boy who was surviving brain cancer. They are a hardhearted bunch. They were no better during this speech. Again, they did not stand for many of the most obvious moments in the speech that were a test of basic morality.

Bottom line? No matter what the issue, even the protection of American citizens over illegal aliens, they sat on their hands, demonstrating for all that they fervently disagree with any of the successful and positive policies Trump has implemented.

"Stand up if you believe that the government's priority should be protecting Americans over illegal immigrants," Trump said. Not one of them stood. That was when Trump commented that they should be ashamed of themselves. Indeed. How to explain their lack of essential American values? Of fundamental decency? They proved beyond all doubt that they do rever illegal migrants into this country over law-abiding American citizens.

The Democrats did not stand when Trump indicted the insane and cruel mutilation of people who suffer from gender dysphoria. That is when President Trump remarked that "These people are crazy." Yes, they are. They are worse than crazy. There is something so very wrong with elected officials who embrace such madness. But then we already knew they were descending into a demented state.

They did not stand for the successful closure of the border; of course not – they engineered the invasion of 20 million migrants from all over the world. They did not stand for the banning of illegal immigrant truck drivers who have caused the deaths of so many innocent civilians. So, one has to assume they support giving truck drivers licenses to illegal migrants who do not even speak English. They did not stand when Trump memorialized Iryna Zarutzka, the young Ukrainian woman murdered by a mentally ill career criminal who should not have been released onto the streets of North Carolina. They refused to stand in the presence of her mother! "How do you not stand?" Trump asked.

Good question. They are, after all, the same people who professed to love Ukraine, with little Ukrainian flags on all their social media. They did not even stand for the Olympic gold medal-winning U.S. hockey players. This Democrat party is ruthless. But none of their actions during this SOTU speech was surprising. They have made their anti-Americanism abundantly clear for the last eleven years, from the moment Trump announced his candidacy in 2015.

Why? He's an outsider? He's a businessman, not a politician? He's not a member of the uniparty's deep state? All of the above? Has it been the fact that he's promised to "drain the swamp"? Good luck on that one. The Democrats, and too many of the Republicans, do revel in being part of the swamp. Playing by swamp rules makes them rich. Accommodating the lobbyists and donors is easier and more profitable than representing their constituents. Why are the good guys so few in number? Why are the crooks and cowards so plentiful?

One of the most revealing proofs of the Democrats' amorality was their decision not to cover the ceremony President Trump held for the Angel Moms on Monday, to honor the grief of parents and family members of those murdered by illegal immigrants. There are too many to name here, but suffice to say that the grim stories each of those parents has endured is factually unendurable. Not one mainstream media outlet covered the event. A panel of women on CNN mentioned it, referring to those parents as "so-called Angel Moms"! Apparently, there is not a single Democrat on the planet who gives the losses thousands of families have had to face a second's thought. They are too busy condemning ICE. How do we describe such people? The only word that comes to mind is "evil."

It was the Obama administration that weaponized the DOJ, the FBI, and probably every other agency under its control. It was the Biden administration that opened the border to millions of third-world migrants, which caused the massive rising costs that we all sustained, as well as the brutal increase in crime and the Democrats' refusal to imprison the criminals or release them to ICE.

Ending cash bail puts violent thugs back on the streets within hours of committing a violent crime. Invariably, they re-commit within days and then are released again.

While we all realize why the Democrats oppose voter ID (they cannot win without cheating) what explains

Democrats Slam Democrats For ‘Rigging’ Democrat Primaries

By: Tyler Durden
ZeroHedge.com 02/27/2026

The party that won't stop lecturing America about democracy is once again rigging its own primary by endorsing - thereby biasing voters - towards certain candidates over others. On Monday, the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee (DCCC) endorsed 12 candidates through its "Red to Blue" program to help Democrats win back the majority in the House of Representatives.

"Today, the DCCC announced the first slate of 12 top-tier candidates added to its highly competitive 'Red to Blue' program for the 2026 cycle," the committee said in a statement. "This initial group of candidates will receive strategic guidance, staff resources, training, and fundraising support to ensure they are in the best possible position to win in November."

The committee describes the "Red to Blue" program as a "highly competitive and battle-tested DCCC program that arms top-tier candidates with organizational and fundraising support to help them continue to develop strong campaigns." Candidates earn spots in the program by hitting aggressive benchmarks for grassroots engagement, local support, and fundraising.

Now, 17 Democratic congressional candidates are accusing the party's own campaign arm of torching the integrity of the 2026 primary process by interfering with the primary. According to a joint statement from the snubbed candidates, this early backing by the DCCC "carries significant influence in the primary process — often shaping fundraising pipelines, access, and perceived viability before voters have had the opportunity to evaluate the full field."

The statement highlighted mounting frustration among Democratic candidates nationwide, who are concerned about the increasingly aggressive pattern of early primary intervention by the DCCC, "a trend they say risks weakening voter trust and diminishing the role of voters in selecting their own nominees." "Primaries are not an inconvenience, they are the foundation of democratic legitimacy," the candidates said.

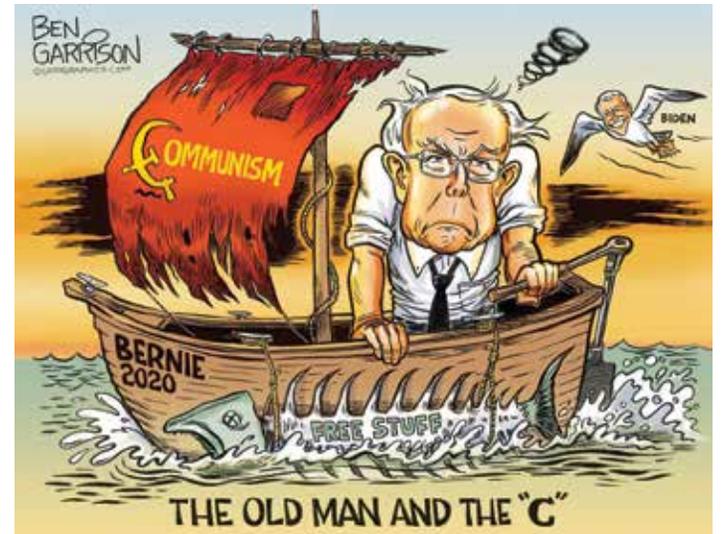

In multiple states and districts, party leadership has signaled preferred candidates well before voters have had the opportunity to evaluate the full field. Through early infrastructure support, fundraising advantages, and institutional backing, these actions show that outcomes are being shaped before ballots are cast. Candidates emphasize that their concern is not opposition to party infrastructure or general election strategy. Rather, they argue that legitimacy in the primary depends on fairness and openness in the months prior.

"You cannot argue that democracy is on the ballot in November while narrowing democracy in the primaries from now through August," the candidates who were passed over argue. "If a candidate is strong, they should be able to earn support in open competition. Protecting them from competition is not confidence."

DCCC Chair Rep. Suzan DelBene defended the committee's picks with an answer that probably made the dissidents even angrier. "These are all strong candidates, they're the ones who are going to be the general election candidate and they're the ones that we think can win the general election," she said.

"We are just six months away from the primary," Knapp pointed out. "And it's incredibly frustrating." He added. "This is precisely what we've been voicing concerns about as Democrats for years, and it appears we are repeating the same mistakes."

Democrats have faced accusations of rigging elections for years. Last year, Bernie Sanders (I-VT) blasted his own party, accusing Democratic leaders of rigging elections and shutting down any semblance of a fair primary process. He even agreed with the assessment that the party has become "a threat to democracy."

Sanders showed real grassroots momentum in his 2016 and 2020 presidential bids, but party effectively blocked his path to victory both times. The perception that entrenched establishment figures moved to stop him from upending the status quo has never really gone away — and Sanders himself all but confirmed it.

their incomprehensible defense of murderous criminals? Why do the governor of Minnesota and the mayor of Minneapolis organize violent protesters against ICE when other cities that willingly cooperated and turned over their illegal immigrant felons, without the chaos of Minneapolis (and Los Angeles)? It's all, as they say, "performative," as in staged and funded by the anti-Americans amongst us, many of them foreigners. Who can watch the ugly expressions of the faces of so many of those Democrats, Ilhan Omar, Rashida Tlaib, Debbie Wasserman-Schultz, etc., and not wonder, "Who are these people?" Clearly, they do not love America. They mean to rob, cheat, and steal from the American taxpayers who pay to feed and shelter them. The more generous the U.S. is to migrants, the more they relish defrauding us. It's how they roll.

The country is so much better off since Trump was re-elected, and that fact makes the reasons for the Democrats' rage and fury obvious. He has brought the country back from the brink to which Obama/Biden took us. They stupidly defended, even celebrated, Biden's policies, even though they certainly knew he was gone mentally and that his open border was a disaster that may well never be completely undone. Obama/Biden made war on the United States and did horrific damage.

Trump is doing everything in his power to save the country. This SOTU speech was one of the best of all time. Will it change the minds of brain-numbed Democrats? Not likely. Those people have been body-snatched, never to be returned to sanity or love of country.

"A nation can survive its fools, and even the ambitious. But it cannot survive treason from within."
~ Cicero. The current cabal of Democrats is treasonous.

The Clash Of Civilizations Restarts History

Western globalists won't last long.

By: J.B. Shurk 02/25/2026
www.AmericanThinker.com

Thirty-five years ago, American political scientist Francis Fukuyama made a name for himself by advancing the proposition that the end of the Cold War and the dissolution of the Soviet Union promised the ascendancy and universalization of so-called Western liberal democracy. As a Marxist-Hegelian who saw the progression of history as an evolutionary process with a natural and predetermined conclusion, Fukuyama envisioned Western-styled liberalism as both “the endpoint of mankind’s ideological evolution” and “the final form of human government.” Expecting all human struggles to barrel toward a state of imminent equilibrium and future peace, Fukuyama stated out loud what many other late-twentieth century thinkers also believed: Humanity had reached the end of history.

After the 9/11 Islamic terror attacks in the United States, two decades of the “Global War on Terrorism,” communist China’s expansive “Belt and Road Initiative,” immigration-fueled social strife, the collapse of public trust in government institutions, the prevalence of pre-civil war conditions across Europe, the rise of Indian economic power, the emergence of Donald Trump’s nationalism as a counterbalance to the World Economic Forum’s vaunted globalism, the return of the Russian Federation as a major source of European angst, the growth of “multiculturalism” and its attendant fracturing of national unity, the “great powers” competition for hydrocarbon energies and other natural resources, the new geopolitical race to project strength in the Arctic, and the ever-present discussion of an impending World War III — just to name a few of the numerous global conflicts of the first quarter of the present century — Fukuyama’s “end of history” argument has probably reached the end of its usefulness.

Before the curse of humanity’s short memory stores Fukuyama’s “end of history” thesis in the cupboard until it can be retrieved, dusted off, and recycled for practical use next century (just as Fukuyama had done with the historical conceptions of Hegel and Marx), it is worth noting how much of the academic world bought into this argument. I remember listening to two young political science professors discussing Fukuyama’s work after the 9/11 terror attacks, and even then — in the midst of such a horrific rebuke to the proposition that a globalized form of Western liberalism was preordained — both academics were staunch believers in the “end of history” and disagreed only about whether Professor Fukuyama was worthy of so much praise for having merely stated what was glaringly obvious.

I was around another man at the time named Samuel P. Huntington, and he had written an essay and book that took Fukuyama’s thesis to task. In The Clash of Civilizations and the Remaking of World Order, Professor Huntington argued that unbridgeable cultural conflicts would continue to remake the world. Although critics called him “racist,” “Islamophobic,” “ignorant,” and even “Hitlerian” for dismissing the unifying effects of “diversity” and “multiculturalism,” Huntington’s predictions for a volatile twenty-first century were much more accurate than anything coming from the “end of history” camp. Still, even after death, the man who dispassionately forecasted a civilizational clash and an emerging period of global uncertainty is still maligned as “prejudicial,” “white supremacist,” “bigoted,” and “imperialist.”

Is there any conflict raging in the world today that can’t be described in terms of competing cultural values? Israel and its Islamic neighbors have been in a perennial state of war for eighty years. Indian Hindus and Pakistani Muslims remain at each other’s throats. Christianity and Islam have added fuel to fiery tribal conflicts that continue to rage across the continent of Africa. Armenia’s Christians and Azerbaijan’s Muslims struggle to maintain peace. The Balkans remain a potpourri of combative cultures and ethnic groups whose simmering passions can quickly boil over. Burma, India, Bangladesh, Thailand, China, Cambodia, Vietnam, and Laos fight against each other and themselves as civilizational loyalties turn ancient resentments into recurring bouts of violence. The War in Ukraine centers around the contested Donbas region whose people more closely align with the language, religion, and culture of Russia than with the historic identity that unites the people living in the western two-thirds of Ukraine.

Everywhere in the world, battle lines are drawn around civilizational identity. Religious conflict, historic grievance, and cultural incompatibility drive violence around the planet. Yet Western globalists in Europe and North America pretend not to notice. They organize annual conventions where members of the World Economic Forum or the Council on Foreign Relations or the Royal Institute of International Affairs can discuss “multiculturalism,” “open borders,” “established norms,” and the “rules-based international order.” They speak about “nationalism” and “patriotism” as if they were diseases requiring quarantine for those showing symptoms. They like Islam and are willing to imprison anyone seen as violating Sharia Law or causing offense to Muslims. But they generally despise Christians and Jews and don’t mind when medieval cathedrals mysteriously burn to the ground or Hamas terrorists rape Israeli women and kill Israeli babies. They pray fanatically at the altar of their “green energy” religion, while replacing entire domestic industries with the coal-powered, slave-labor-produced, government-subsidized exports of the Chinese Communist Party. White, Western globalists prefer to ignore the threats of Islamic jihad and Chinese totalitarianism, sip from glasses brimming with crisp Sauvignon blanc, and stew in the intoxicating vapors of their own haughty uselessness.

One might think that the last twenty-five years of global volatility would have given globalism’s biggest promoters some measure of pause as the “end of history” arrived and passed. But Western “elites” generally suffer from cerebral deficiency, shameless incuriosity, and pathological stubbornness. According to the blue bloods on both sides of the Atlantic — such as Canada’s banker turned prime minister, Mark Carney; France’s banker turned president, Emmanuel Macron; Germany’s BlackRock board member turned chancellor, Friedrich Merz; and the European Commission’s noble aristocrat turned installed

Kozyrev Mirrors

As a promising young astrophysicist, during the Stalinist purges of the Soviet Union, Nikolay Kozyrev was sent to the Russian Gulag in the Arctic, where he reportedly developed his unconventional ideas about time. Ten years later, he was released, returned to science, and achieved his most significant work.

Kozyrev proposed a theory he called “torsion field theory”, which postulated that time is an active physical substance with measurable properties that can vary, including density and flow rate. He said that time interacts directly with consciousness, sending energy and information, and he believed that curved reflective forms could focus or reflect this temporal energy. This led to the construction of a physical device consisting of polished aluminum sheets arranged in a cylindrical, spiral, or parabolic curve, large enough to enclose a seated human subject so a person can sit inside the structure. The organic geometry was chosen to reflect the torsion fields of a person’s light body.

One or more subjects would sit inside

these Kozyrev mirrors, isolated from external stimuli, and asked to simply observe their inner experience. The subjects reported altered states of consciousness, they experienced remote viewing, had visions of distant locations, made contact with other entities, and some shared telepathic experiences with each other, including the transmission of information.

During the Kaznacheev experiments conducted at the Institute of Clinical and Experimental Medicine in Siberia during the 1990s and 2000s, these experiments were conducted above the polar circle, where the plasma of aurora events seemed to directly interact with the Mirror installation. The researchers specifically argued that proximity to the auroral oval, where aurora activity is concentrated, was experimentally significant because the plasma activity provided conditions that enhanced the effects they were observing. During high auroral activity periods, subjects in the Kozyrev mirrors experienced more clarity and specificity in their visions and psychic connections.

The researchers proposed that the Plasma being continuously fed into our environment by solar wind is a state of matter that carries structured information into our world and into our consciousness, and the Kozyrev Mirrors act as a sort of amplifier for this information. The mirror reflects not just light, but future light, something Kozyrev discovered when he pointed his telescope ahead of Andromeda’s visible position, where he received a signal that was traveling faster than light.

Ulrike Granogger is an Austrian researcher and science journalist who works in the area of Consciousness, anomalous physics, and Parapsychology. In 2005, Granogger met with researchers of the Kozyrev Mirrors, to help humanity access this network of intelligent intercommunication. She proposes that there are multiple dimensions of conscious reality, and warns that the global gravitational wave antenna network could be used for mass consciousness manipulation. Her solution is aligning with higher dimensional thought forms and language, and she points to The Discourse on the Eighth and Ninth, found in the Nag Hammadi library, as an an-

Israel’s Purging of Christians From the Holy Land and the Plot to Keep Americans From Noticing

The Tucker Carlson Show
tuckercarlson.com
Recap provided by TFPnews.com

In this two-hour interview, Tucker Carlson talks with Dr. Fares Abraham, a Palestinian-American Christian from the Bethlehem area, who argues that Christian communities in the Holy Land are being steadily squeezed by settlement expansion, movement restrictions, and a broader political narrative that—he says—keeps American Christians from recognizing what is happening on the ground.

Abraham describes his home area—an historically Christian community near Bethlehem—as a place where families are leaving not because of local Muslim neighbors, but because daily life has become untenable amid Israeli settlement growth and the infrastructure that accompanies it (roads, checkpoints, security zones). He frames this as part of a long, slow demographic erosion: pressure that does not always look like mass expulsions, but instead like a tightening ring that makes ordinary life—work, school, worship, visiting relatives—harder each year.

To move the conversation from statistics to lived experience, Abraham recounts incidents of violence and intimidation that he says marked his family and community, including an episode in which his mother was shot by an Israeli soldier when he was a child. He also cites accounts involving attacks around Christian sites and congregants, including references to Gaza’s Baptist Church and the Holy Family Church, to argue that Christians are not insulated from the region’s broader cycles of force and retaliation.

dignity—to a modern state project.

Abraham condemns Hamas’s Oct. 7 attacks, but argues that Israel’s military response has been disproportionate and has devastated civilians, including Christians. He uses that contrast to make a broader point: that, in his view, Palestinian Christians are trapped between militant violence on one side and overwhelming state power on the other, while their plight draws little sustained attention in U.S. political debate.

Abraham and Carlson suggest that Americans—especially American Christians—often hear the conflict framed in ways that emphasize biblical destiny and civilizational struggle, while downplaying the day-to-day consequences for long-rooted Christian communities in Bethlehem-area towns and elsewhere. Abraham claims language policing and public-relations pressure shape what U.S. lawmakers and institutions will say, narrowing the space for sympathetic coverage of Palestinian Christian narratives.

A central claim is that some American Christians, motivated by end-times theology or “Christian Zionist” teaching, have helped fund projects Abraham associates with settlement expansion—support that he contends indirectly accelerates the migration of indigenous Christians. Military Food Testing Results Revealed

By Zen Honeycutt and Michaela Bardossas 02/04/2026
www.MomsAcrossAmerica.com

In previous testing of school lunches and fast foods, Moms Across America (MAA) found a concerning number of meals containing harmful contaminants, many at alarming levels. In fact, the Health Research Institute Laboratory Chief Scientist, John Fagan, stated, "The test results of school lunches show more toxins than nutrients." School lunches fall under the jurisdiction of the US Department of Agriculture.

Recognizing the urgent need for better-sourced, higher-quality food, MAA commissioned independent laboratory testing of 40 military meals and MREs to assess whether safer, higher-quality options are achievable. Did "military grade" pertain to their food, too? Did they have higher quality, and if so, could the USDA be convinced to apply those standards to school lunches? The question raised is intended to improve the quality of food for both the military and schools, in the interest of national security.

While food is not political, the samples procured for testing contained ingredients mostly grown or raised during the Biden Administration, and the Trump Administration has an opportunity to address the serious issues allowed during President previous administrations.

Part of the impetus for testing military food stemmed from MAA's director learning—through direct communication with a Chinese military general—that China does not feed its troops GMO* foods, alongside documented reporting that Russia prohibits GMOs within its country. * How GMOs contribute to the contamination of the food supply: GMO crops are primarily corn, soy, wheat, canola, sugarbeets and some potatoes. 80% of GMOs are genetically engineered to withstand glyphosate and harmful agrochemicals, meaning the entire crop can be sprayed with the herbicide and the weeds will die, but the crop will not. This process, along with spraying grains, peas, beans, and legumes with glyphosate herbicides as preharvest weedkillers or drying agents, results in high levels of glyphosate in animal feed and human food.

Nutritionists agree that military food quality is imperative to test, monitor and improve: "America's service members are trained to withstand extreme physical, mental, and environmental stress in defense of the nation," said Licensed Nutritionist and Board Member of MAA, Kendall Mackintosh, MS, CNS, LDN "In return, the United States has a fundamental obligation to protect their health, safety, and well-being, especially when it comes to the food they are required to consume daily, often exclusively, during training, deployment, and combat operations. Yet these findings raise urgent and deeply troubling concerns that this obligation is not being met," concluded Kendall Mackintosh.

Independent laboratory testing commissioned by Moms Across America, with the support of Children's Health Defense Military Chapter and Centner Academy, reveals that U.S. military food, including Meals, Ready to Eat (MREs) and other rationed and cafeteria items, have low levels of nutrients and are contaminated with a mixture of toxic pesticides, banned veterinary drugs, heavy metals, and glyphosate at levels that pose serious threats to human health.

Summary Points:
-40 samples -16 samples from 6 military base cafeterias and 24 MREs were tested for toxic chemicals and nutrients. The samples contained ingredients such as wheat, corn, soy, and meat likely grown, raised, or imported during the Biden Era
-Pesticides - 100% of military food samples tested contained harmful pesticide residues -100% of pesticides found in military cafeteria food are manufactured in China and other countries, 65% primarily in China

Over 70% of samples contained multiple pesticides (ranging from 2-26) and as many as 15 to 26 different pesticide residues in a single item. A total of 62 pesticides and chemical mixtures were present, not evaluated for cumulative or synergistic health effects.

-Glyphosate - 95% of military food samples contained harmful levels of glyphosate/AMPA.

-Veterinary Drugs- 5 Veterinary drugs detected- including ractopamine and trenbolone acetate, growth promoting drugs used widely in US beef and pork production but banned in 160 other countries, including China, EU and Russia; 3 other drugs found are banned in most countries or not approved for human use - showing likely contamination from imported meat and an urgency for sourcing American, regenerative and organically raised meat for military meals. 4 out of 5 of the veterinary drugs detected are made in China.

-Heavy metals -100% of samples tested contained arsenic, cadmium, lead, mercury, and aluminum. In some samples, arsenic, cadmium, and aluminum were found at levels 430%-17,300% higher than the EPA's drinking water guidelines.

-Minerals- Analysis of military meals reveals levels of certain nutrients were lower, corn nutrients up to 3 x lower, or inconsistent than those set by USDA standards.

-Military meals also showed mineral levels 5-10 times higher than school lunches, indicating fortification (health risks for the military) and a truly dismal nutrient situation for school lunches (far lower nutrients than the military).

-PFAS were detected in one sample, indicating the need to test additional samples.

-Mycotoxins - not tested - testing is recommended mineral-rich soil, producing naturally nutrient-dense food without toxic contamination or synthetic additives.

Each year, more than 1.5 billion U.S. military meals and 37 million Meals, Ready-to-Eat (MREs) are served to active-duty service members, making the military one of the most powerful purchasers and influencers in both the U.S. and global food supply. The health, readiness, and national security of our troops and our public school students depend on these meals to support physical performance, cognitive function, and long-term well-being.

"We applaud President Trump's commitment to increasing the budget of the military to ensure Americans are safe and creating the most powerful military in the world," said Zen Honeycutt, Founding Executive Director of Moms Across America. "As our nation's Commander in Chief, we call on him to be a true hero by ensuring our global power by providing the safest and healthiest meals of any military in the world. We are calling for American troops to have American food - regeneratively raised, organic meat and non-toxic, organic and nutrient-dense produce."

Update: As a direct result of this food testing, the HHS has announced that, within 2 months, 20 military bases are rolling out Real Food pilot programs, with freshly cooked whole foods! The school meals are getting an upgrade too!!! Thank you President Trump, Secretary Kennedy, Secretary Rollins and the leaders of the armed forces!

Beneath The Headline: US States Are Rejoining The WHO

By Tracy Beanz and Michelle Edwards 02/09/2026
TheHighWire.com

While the majority of Americans have undoubtedly grown weary of unelected global authorities wielding unchecked tyrannical power in the name of “health,” California Governor Gavin Newsom has just rolled out the red carpet for more of the same. In a move that would be laughable if it weren’t so brazenly dangerous, Newsom just announced that California has become the first state (not country, mind you, but state) to formally join the World Health Organization’s (WHO) international disease platform to coordinate international response to emerging public health threats known as the Global Outbreak Alert and Response Network, or GOARN. Newsom’s move isn’t diplomacy. Instead, it’s allegiance to a pre-scripted future that is far from any voter ballot box. And the implications are staggering.

The January 23rd press release from Newsom’s office could just as easily have come straight from WHO headquarters. After personally meeting with WHO Director-General Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus in Geneva to finalize the deal, California sealed its role as a “subnational leader” in global health collaboration. As expected, notably absent was any mention of voter input, legislative debate, or accountability. Why? Because in Newsom’s California, sovereignty is not something he tends to consult his people about. Instead, he effortlessly trades it in Davos.

While the Trump administration formally withdrew the United States from the WHO in January 2026—finally ending 78 years of membership and substantial financial contribution—apparently, Newsom couldn’t wait to get to the front of the line. Why? Maybe because he has long aspired to be more than just a governor. Indeed, he wants a global portfolio, and what better way than to outsource California’s health autonomy to the very same shady group behind the lockdowns, massive censorship, mask mandates, and unprecedented compliance coercion of an experimental, untested gene-therapy “vaccine”? Make no mistake. None of these decisions were founded on protecting public health.

Despite pushback from nations like the United States, the WHO is working feverishly to finalize a new set of international health regulations and a pandemic accord that would give it sweeping control over the response to future crises. And not just during pandemics. Instead, these overlord rules would apply to anything it deems to be a “public health emergency.” Such as climate change, misinformation, disobedient states, and so on. Essentially, a choose-your-own-emergency standard of governance that, instead of resisting, Newsom is volunteering California to participate.

Again, at a time when countries like Hungary, Slovakia, and even members of the African Union are pushing back against WHO overreach, one of the most powerful states in our nation is diving head-first into a globalist experiment with no democratic oversight. In no way is this leadership by Newsom. It is obedience in disguise.

Who exactly is orchestrating this dutiful allegiance? Undoubtedly, Newsom’s friend Sir Jeremy Farrar played a role. For years, Farrar and Newsom have often joined forces on significant issues that the WHO has used to support its dictatorship. Now the WHO’s Chief Scientist, Farrar, played a starring role during COVID in pushing the lockdown narrative while also downplaying lab-leak concerns and dissenting scientific voices. Following the pandemic, Farrar and his cadre moved on to warn of future pandemics.

Undoubtedly, they’re not just preparing; they are also rehearsing.

To that point, the WHO proudly announced in December 2025 that it is actively “getting ready for the next pandemic,” complete with simulation exercises, new frameworks, and tighter coordination. Their efforts follow years of tabletop exercises, including the Bill Gates’ funded Event 201, which took place just months before the COVID-19 pandemic. In hindsight, Event 201 was a chilling rehearsal that eerily mirrored much of the real-world tyranny-based responses forced upon society, right down to the censorship of so-called “mis-information.”

Of course, the WHO sees all of its efforts as success. In fact, in its February 2026 statement, the organization declared that, thanks to them, the world is “better prepared” for the next pandemic. What they mean, of course, is that the framework for lockdowns, mandates, global messaging control, and its centralized command—despite no partnership with the United States on the federal level—are now synced and ready for action.

Meanwhile, California, under Newsom’s iron-fisted pandemic rule, endured some of the harshest money is quietly flowing into this and other collaborations. Unsettlingly, GOARN spending is not easily found in CDC budget documents, and the agency's roughly $11.6 billion annual budget continues to fund global programs with limited transparency.

ic process. As detailed by Joseph Mercola, the WHO is increasingly influenced by wealthy private foundations, NGOs, and corporate sponsors – many of whom had more to gain (and billions to make) from the mass vaccination and perpetual emergency declarations unveiled during the COVID-19 pandemic than they did from siding with what's actually best for public health. So, as we survey the landscape and take note thus far of those who have joined the other team, let's connect the dots of where we stand:

neling U.S. expertise and untallied funding into the corrupt global mission.

-Illinois and New York City have followed suit, bypassing voters to lock in global health alignment.
-Newsom, who governed California like a feudal lord during COVID, is now offering up the state to the very machine that fueled that response.

The decision by Newsom, and now Illinois and NYC, is not just bad policy. In reality, it is a test balloon for future governance by international decree. The deeper danger here is not just what Newsom willingly signed Californians up for. The deeper danger is the precedent that a single state executive can align with foreign and supra-international institutions outside of the consent of those it governs.

That should immediately alarm everyone. As the WHO builds a new scam of global health control, Newsom just sold California's soul. The next question is who else will follow. Or, more importantly, who will resist.

lockdowns in the nation during the COVID-19 pandemic. The state kept schools closed longer than most of Europe, criminalized those not falling in line, and drained its already suffering small-business economy dry, all while Newsom did as he pleased. Today, California is suffering, with homelessness soaring and mental health in crisis. But rather than tend to those very real situations, Newsom has chosen to virtue-signal across the globe.

Despite the US cutting ties with the WHO on the federal level, Newsom is not alone in his allegiance to the NGO. The US Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) remains a long-standing founding partner of the WHO's GOARN network. While the US stepped back from other WHO commitments, the CDC never left its place as a "crucial partner" at GOARN. In fact, the agency has personnel and surveillance operations embedded within GOARN. The CDC also participates in real-time global event tracking and the coordination of public health responses.

While the CDC's continued involvement with its partnerships in global health protection, including GOARN, is obvious on its Global Health Protection webpage, what's less clear is how much US taxpayer

Following in Newsom's footsteps, the Illinois Department of Public Health and the New York City Department of Health have also joined GOARN. As the first municipal health department in the US to join this UN-led worldwide network, New York City's acting Health Commissioner and Chief Medical Officer, Michelle Morse, said in a statement: "New York City is a global city with 8.5 million residents and more than 12 million international visitors every year. To best prevent disease outbreaks and public health emergencies and to protect New Yorkers and visitors from them, the NYC Health Department is joining hundreds of public health institutions worldwide that share critical public health information to support life-saving prevention and response efforts."

The decisions by California, Illinois, and New York City, which were not made by public vote but rather by executive directive, reflect an unsettling trend post-pandemic. Indeed, blue-state and city health departments are bypassing national sovereignty to pledge loyalty to deep-state-tied international governance health structures. Illinois Governor J.B. Pritzker praised the allegiance as a way to "remain connected to global intelligence." Yet, behind each of these decisions, the same pattern exists. Unelected or unaccountable health bureaucrats partnering with an unelected and globally deceptive institution.

Of course, this pattern fits perfectly with the WHO's preference for technocratic rule over democrat-

Patriot, Tina Peters Still in Prison

Former Mesa County, Colorado, clerk Tina Peters is serving a nine-year state prison sentence after being convicted in 2024 on charges tied to allowing unauthorized access to Dominion voting machines as part of an effort to investigate alleged election vulnerabilities. This patriot tried to secure election integrity and transparency, and was falsely accused of wrongdoing simply for exposing potential ballot-tabulation risks. She has filed a federal habeas petition claiming her constitutional rights—especially free-speech protections—were violated during sentencing, and she has sought release on bond while appealing her state conviction. Federal judges have so far declined to release her, deferring to state-court proceedings and ruling there is no immediate basis to overturn her sentence. Former President Trump has publicly supported Peters and issued a pardon for her federal-level conduct, but that pardon does not apply to her state sentence. The FBI has also been involved in investigating the broader election-security schemes she was linked to, reinforcing the federal interest in the case while state authorities maintain she must complete her prison term before any broader legal shifts take effect.

AAP Faces Landmark RICO Lawsuit Over Vaccine Safety Claims

The American Academy of Pediatrics (AAP) is being sued in federal court under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations (RICO) statute by Children’s Health Defense and several families and physicians. The lawsuit alleges the AAP ran a “decades-long” pattern of fraudulent claims about the safety of the CDC’s childhood vaccine schedule while receiving funding from vaccine makers and financially rewarding pediatricians for high vaccination rates. Plaintiffs argue RICO applies because AAP’s conduct resembles prior organized-crime and tobacco-industry fraud cases, and they seek damages, corrective disclosures, and limits on AAP’s safety-claim language. The case is now in early pretrial stages, with the AAP publicly rejecting the allegations.

An Eye Opening Interview

In a wide-ranging interview on The Tucker Carlson Show, former assistant housing secretary Catherine Austin Fitts warned that a global “control grid” is coming into place, with programmable digital currency as its final piece. She tied this to secret finance, black budgets, and the erosion of transparent government, arguing that central banks, big tech, and covert governance structures are engineering a system of total behavioral control. Fitts urged viewers to preserve analog systems like cash, build resilient local communities, and resist surrendering to centralized financial and digital ID regimes.

Iran-Linked Threat Grows at Home

U.S. authorities are warning of a heightened “homeland threat” from Iran-linked actors as the conflict in the Middle East escalates, with intelligence assessing that Tehran could direct or inspire attacks inside America. In Texas, a deadly Austin shooting by a suspect with Iran-linked symbols has prompted Gov. Greg Abbott to warn of Iranian “sleeper cells” and to deploy more state security. Meanwhile, Denver-area officials have underscored the long-running danger posed by Iranian proxies and state-sponsored terrorism, as the Department of Homeland Security urges vigilance against lone-wolf plots, cyber intrusions, and violence targeting government, military, or pro-Israel figures on U.S. soil.

Cuba Shoots Up “US Narco Terrorist Boat” From Florida

Cuban border forces opened fire on a Florida-registered speedboat that entered Cuban territorial waters, killing four people and wounding six, Cuban authorities say. Cuba claims the vessel, carrying a heavily armed group of Cuban nationals based in the U.S., was attempting an “infiltration for terrorist purposes” and opened fire first, injuring a Cuban commander, prompting a return barrage. The speedboat, identified as registered in Florida, was intercepted near the Villa Clara coast about 100 miles from the state. The incident has sharply escalated already tense U.S.–Cuba relations, with Washington demanding answers over the deadly confrontation

Settle First, Ask No Questions: The Syngenta Model

Mounting evidence links the herbicide paraquat to Parkinson’s disease, particularly among farmworkers and rural residents exposed over years. Dozens of studies show higher Parkinson’s risk in people who mix, apply, or live near paraquat-treated fields, with risk increasing alongside exposure duration and intensity. Lab experiments confirm paraquat can damage dopamine-producing neurons and produce Parkinson-like brain changes, helping explain the human findings. European regulators have banned paraquat, and China plus other countries have sharply restricted it, citing neurologic-risk concerns. In the U.S., however, the Environmental Protection Agency has continued to allow paraquat use despite independent scientific reviews supporting a causal link, while Syngenta faces a wave of lawsuits tying the chemical to Parkinson’s diagnoses. Critics argue the company has prioritized massive settlements over transparency, shielding internal documents and preventing juries from fully exposing the full scope of alleged harm.

Jury Finds Doctors Liable for Malpractice in Gender Surgery Lawsuit

A New York jury has awarded 22-year-old detransitioner Fox

Varian $2 million in damages after finding her psychologist and surgeon liable for malpractice over a double mastectomy she received at age 16. The verdict is the first of its kind in a detransitioner malpractice case, with the jury concluding the doctors failed to meet established standards of care, including adequately addressing her mental-health conditions and pressing her into irreversible surgery as a minor. Varian, who no longer identifies as transgender, testified that the procedure left her with lasting physical and emotional harm. The ruling is already being heralded by critics of pediatric “gender-affirming” surgery as a turning point, with dozens of similar lawsuits now pending around the country.

Covert U.S. Operation

National Endowment for Democracy (NED) president Damon Wilson was cut off by a House committee member after boasting that his agency helped deploy about 200 Starlink terminals into Iran during recent anti-government violence. Wilson told lawmakers the project was part of a broader push to “spark unrest” in Iran, including smuggling the satellite devices and helping shape anti-Tehran media narratives, before being interrupted by Rep. Lois Frankel, who warned, “You know what, we’d better not talk about it.” Critics portray the effort as a covert U.S. regime-change operation, pointing to mass protests, attacks on government and religious sites, and an eventual Iranian internet blackout that shut down thousands of Starlink units.

More Sellouts in Congress

India's largest and most feared Hindu-supremacist group, the Rashtriya Swayamsevak Sangh (RSS), has hired a powerful Washington lobbying firm, Squire Patton Boggs, to help shape how U.S. lawmakers view religious persecution in India. Lobbying disclosures show the RSS has paid around $330,000 since early 2025 to influence officials in both the Senate and the House, even as attacks on Christian churches, leaders, and communities mount in several Indian states. Advocates warn that the campaign aims to shield Hindu-nationalist violence from Western scrutiny while communities face arson, assaults, and anti-conversion laws weaponized against them.

US Ambassador to Israel

Many have condemned Mike Huckabee as a disgrace to the country, to the Constitution, and to Christ's New Covenant, accusing him of using Christian rhetoric to mask unwavering service to the political establishment. Critics argue Huckabee has long advanced policies that expand government power, privilege globalist interests, and ignore constitutional limits, all while styling himself as an evangelical champion. A growing chorus of conservative and Christian commentators warn that his aggressive, expansionist views on Israel are not only unbiblical but dangerous, urging believers not to mistake his political brand for authentic Christian conviction.

Again: It is all Trump's Fault!

Many have accused some Democrats of quietly enabling President Trump's push for war in Iran, even as voters remain wary of another Middle East conflict. Reports suggest Democratic leaders have worked behind the scenes to block or delay a clear up-or-down vote on the Khanna-Massie Iran War Powers Resolution, preferring to let Trump and Republicans bear the political risk while keeping many members off the record. Now, Kentucky Republican Rep. Thomas Massie is pressing to force a public vote, arguing that without congressional authorization the strikes amount to an unconstitutional war and that both major parties have failed to protect the Constitution or servicemembers' lives.

US Under Siege by Bayer-Monsanto

Many have sounded the alarm alongside Rep. Thomas Massie, who warns that Bayer-Monsanto has the country "under siege" as it seeks sweeping legal protections from glyphosate-linked lawsuits. Massie argues the German-owned agrochemical giant has spent over $9 million lobbying Congress, the courts, and the White House to immunize itself from liability, culminating in a Trump executive order that shields domestic glyphosate producers on national-security and food-supply grounds. In response, Massie has introduced the No Immunity for Glyphosate Act, insisting Americans must keep the right to sue in court if they believe they were harmed by the herbicide, even as some agricultural voices warn that abruptly removing glyphosate could severely disrupt farm output and global food markets.

Epstein Files Fallout: Dozens Resign

Many have been forced out of prominent positions after being exposed in the Epstein files, which document extensive ties between Jeffrey Epstein and powerful figures in politics, business, law, and academia. Among them are billionaire Thomas Pritzker, who stepped down as executive chairman of Hyatt; top lawyers like Brad Karp and Kathy Ruemmler, who resigned from leadership roles at major firms and boards after internal emails and gifts to Epstein emerged; and former U.S. Senator George Mitchell, who resigned from the Mitchell Institute. Diplomats, CEOs, and university officials—from Slovakia's Miroslav Lajčák to Dubai Port World's Ahmed bin Sulayem and Nobel-laureate biologist

Richard Axel—have also stepped aside, citing "poor judgment" or reputational harm. Former U.S. Treasury Secretary and ex-Harvard President Larry Summers, who led Harvard University from 2001 to 2006, has also stepped down from several high-profile board and advisory roles amid scrutiny over his past ties to Epstein. World Economic Forum CEO Børge Brende has additionally stepped down amid scrutiny over the WEF's links to Epstein-linked networks and the forum's broader role in the financier's access to global elites.

Ivermectin in the Cure for Cancer

Canadian oncologist Dr. William Makis has released a detailed ivermectin cancer-treatment chart with suggested dosing protocols, arguing that the anti-parasitic drug can complement or partially replace chemotherapy in certain patients. Makis outlines low-dose (0.5–0.6 mg/kg), intermediate-dose (0.8–1.0 mg/kg), and high-dose (1.5–1.8 mg/kg) regimens, recommending cycles of 14 days on and 14 days off, with adjustments based on the individual's cancer type and prognosis. He emphasizes close monitoring by a physician, periodic CT-PET scans, and the use of heart-protective and liver-support measures, especially in heavily pretreated patients.

Gold and Silver Crash

A historic crash in COMEX-traded gold and silver has revived claims that futures-market manipulation helped crush the 2025–2026 precious-metals boom. In late January and early February 2026, gold fell more than 9% in a single day, its worst drop since the early 1980s, while silver plunged over 30% in hours, evaporating billions in paper-metal value. Analysts say the real trigger came from the Chicago Mercantile Exchange (CME), which repeatedly raised margin requirements on gold and silver futures, forcing leveraged longs into cascading liquidations. Critics note that each ounce of COMEX-registered silver backed roughly 350–360 ounces of paper contracts, deepening the gap between the official "spot" price and physical-metal premiums. As margins climbed to 9% on gold and 18% on silver, smaller investors were squeezed while large shorts and institutions allegedly profited, fueling fresh calls for regulators to scrutinize the exchange's margin-hike playbook.

CIA Experiments on Humans

Recently declassified CIA documents have revealed Cold War-era experiments in psychological and neurological control aimed at manipulating human behavior for intelligence and military advantage. The files describe programs exploring remote viewing, mind-altering drugs, and intense mental-training regimens designed to weaponize altered states of consciousness and sharpen perception for espionage and warfare. Building on the agency's earlier MK-Ultra-style research, some newly disclosed material has revived scrutiny of claims that chemicals capable of modifying mood, cognition, or aggression could be covertly delivered through public-health mechanisms, including mass vaccination programs, though explicit proof of such deployment in vaccines remains disputed. The releases come amid broader waves of JFK-related declassification, which have exposed covert CIA actions, foreign-intelligence ties, and new details on the November 1963 assassination, intensifying debate over how far the agency went—and whether such tools could still be used—under the cover of national-security secrecy.

Things They Didn't Teach You in Church: Strengthen Your Faith

By: Jim Brouillette
CCHW Real News HQ
(Rumble and YouTube)

I believe that if you are a person who prays to the Father, there are two things, as a Christian, you should be praying for daily; that God's will be done and that He strengthens your faith. Amazing events are happening in the world today and although I do believe it is all part of God's plan, I also believe that the stronger my faith; the better I will be at serving Him. I am currently teaching the Book of the Acts of the Apostles on our church's YouTube channel, CCHW Real News, and the topic of faith came front and center with me. As I prepared to teach the Book of Acts, I revisited one of the sources of great faith for me and would like to share it with you here.

In Chapter 3 of Acts, we are told about the ministry of Peter and John and the miracles they performed in the name of Jesus of Nazareth. We are told, in verse 2, about a man who had been lame from his mother's womb and whom the people laid daily at the temple gate since he had been a young man, in another chapter we find he was now over 40 years old. Then in verse 7, speaking of Peter; And he took him by the right hand, and lifted him up; and immediately his feet and ankle bones received strength.

By the time we reach Chapter 7 of Acts we have been told about Christ's resurrection, the 40 days Jesus spent teaching His apostles after the resurrection, the Holy Spirit coming to the apostles on Pentecost, and the development of the early church. Then we are introduced to the first recorded martyr in the Bible, Stephen, and it is emphasized several times that these were eyewitness accounts from people who watched these events take place. In fact, we are told that one of the requirements of the person chosen to replace Judas Iscariot was that he also had to be an eyewitness to everything that had taken place (Acts 1:21 & 22). Here is what I discovered long ago and have held onto for years; all these men claimed to be eyewitnesses to the ministry of Jesus Christ and all the miracles He performed, from His baptism by John the Baptist to His crucifixion and resurrection from the dead.

Stephen was the first recorded martyr, he was stoned to death - Acts 7:59; And they stoned Stephen, calling upon God, and saying, Lord Jesus, receive my spirit. Although all the deaths of Christ's first disciples and the apostles are not biblically recorded, we are told James, the son of Zebedee, was stabbed to death with a sword. Acts Chapter 12:1 Now about that time Herod the king stretched forth his hands to vex certain of the church. 2 And he killed James, the brother of John with the sword. In fact, almost all these eyewitnesses of Christ's ministry, miracles, crucifixion and resurrection, were martyred.

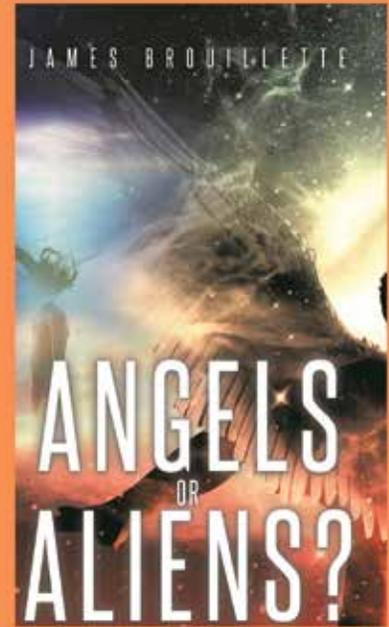

According to historical and traditional accounts: Philip was stoned to death. James, the brother of Christ, was beaten to death, after he survived being thrown from the southeast pinnacle of the temple in Jerusalem (over a hundred-foot fall) because he refused to deny his faith in Jesus Christ. Barnabas was burned alive, and Mark was dragged to death through the streets of Alexandria. Peter was crucified upside down in Rome, Paul was beheaded, Andrew was crucified on an X shaped cross in Greece, and Bartholomew, also known as Nathanael, was tortured and then beheaded in Armenia. Thomas, the doubter, was tortured and burned to death in a furnace. Matthew, the author of the gospel, was beheaded. Matthias, the thirteen apostle, was stoned and then beheaded in Ethiopia. Luke was Hanged, and Timothy was stoned to death. In fact, John, the author of the Book of John, his three epistles, and the Book of Revelation, was about the only well-known follower of Jesus Christ that was not martyred.

The most common theory concerning John's death is that he was arrested in Ephesus and faced martyrdom where his enemies threw him in a huge basin of boiling oil. According to tradition, John was miraculously delivered from death and then, because fear was instilled in his enemies by this miracle, he was sentenced to slave labor in the mines of the Island Patmos. On this island in the southern part of the Aegean Sea, John had a vision, Jesus Christ appeared to him and guided him in the writing of the prophetic Book of Revelation. It is believed that the apostle John was later freed, probably because of his old age, and was returned to what is now known as Turkey. It is thought that John, the beloved, died as an old man sometime after 98 AD, perhaps the only apostle to die of natural causes.

So, what's my point? Each one of these men were eyewitnesses to the life and death of Jesus Christ and anyone of them could have avoided their gruesome death by denouncing Christ's miracles and by denouncing His resurrection and ascension into heaven. All they would have had to have said was: Oh Yeah that's not true, and they would have not only avoided their gruesome deaths, but the enemies of Jesus would also have made them heroes! But none did. Think about that. I find great strength and faith from the fact that none of these eyewitnesses decanted their story to save their own life. Here is a serious question: Do you know anyone that would go to their death, in the most gruesome horrible ways, because of some fake story they had told? Do you know anyone who would allow themselves to be burned alive, crucified, stoned to death, or beheaded because they wouldn't denounce a lie they had told? I don't! Grab on to that friend, it should strengthen your faith. These men all died gruesome deaths, professing the truth of Jesus Christ!

president Ursula von der Leyen — “multiculturalism” is our future, “diversity is our strength,” and “cultural nationalism” is a “terrorist ideology” that breeds “hate.”

Even after President George W. Bush’s failed “nation-building” gambit to bring “democracy” and “women’s rights” to Afghanistan and the Middle East, Western globalists insist that civilizational clashes aren’t real. Even after the exposure of Muslim “rape gangs” trading local girls as sex slaves in the United Kingdom, the Netherlands, Belgium, Germany, and France, Western globalists insist that “diversity is our strength” and “multiculturalism” is our future. Even after communist China’s increasingly provocative saber-rattling regarding Taiwan, pervasive espionage and sabotage within the United States, and public promises of world domination, Western globalists insist on transferring huge sums of national wealth to the Chinese Communist Party in exchange for China’s lip service to “international norms.” What Tall-eyrand said of the Bourbons applies equally well to the West’s suicidal cult of self-hating globalists: “They have learned nothing and forgotten nothing.”

As we enter the second quarter of the twentieth century, the world is about to receive a harsh education in the persistent reality of civilizational conflict. The “end of history” tripe was always a figment of self-deluding theoreticians who envision themselves as philosopher kings. In the real world, values matter. Culture matters. Religion matters. The past matters. Honor matters. Violent conflict does not disappear in a puff of smoke when Marxist-Hegelians hold up their dog-eared copies of Das Kapital and declare it must be so. In the real world — where bullets fly faster than words — theories written on scraps of paper are rolled up into cigarettes or left under a rock near the trench latrine. In the real world, people fight, cultures compete, and civilizations clash.

Western globalists who refuse to learn the basics won’t long last. From the Arctic to the Antarctic, battle lines are being drawn and redrawn everywhere. The past informs the present. The present informs the future. The rest of history is just now beginning.

Quartzsite “Here We Grow Again”

Quartzsite celebrated the Grand Opening of Starbucks next to Terrible’s Gas Station. Most of the Town Council and Chamber of Commerce members were in attendance. This will pull people off the freeway because many people are addicted to Starbucks. As a reminder, if you want to keep your money local and drink some excellent coffee, there is also Camel Camp coffee at 131 W Main St in Quartzsite near Sunset Sheds at Main and Central.

The QIA (an integral part of this community) celebrated their 60th Anniversary. They had two live concerts along with a dinner and the lighting of their WWII era aircraft search light. Congratulations QIA!

N-Drip, located across from Arizona Financial Credit Union in the former Herb’s Hardware building, vacated the building this month.

Police Chief Romo has resigned and the Town is now accepting applications to fill that position. Lieutenant Burnet is the obvious choice but it is uncertain if he even wants the job.

Mike Roth has a new trial date set for March 19th at 9am. He has filed a motion to disqualify Town Prosecutor Justin Petersen, citing a conflict of interest. Petersen and Town Attorney Estes are associated with the same law firm, Pierce Coleman.

~ Obedience ~

What Does the World Say?

When asked, AI (artificial intelligence) responded:

Obedience is often viewed as a fundamental aspect of personal and social conduct. In various contexts, it can signify respect for authority, adherence to rules, and the importance of discipline in achieving goals. Psychological Insights: Psychologists suggest that obedience can stem from social conditioning, where individuals learn to comply with societal norms and expectations. Obedience can also be a double-edged sword; while it can lead to order and stability, it may also result in blind compliance, potentially leading to unethical behavior.

Modern Views: In contemporary discussions, especially in leadership and management, obedience is often balanced with the need for critical thinking and ethical decision-making. Leaders are encouraged to foster environments where questioning and dialogue are valued alongside obedience to rules.

What Does the Bible Say?

1 Samuel 15:22 But Samuel replied: “Does the LORD delight in burnt offerings and sacrifices as much as in obeying the LORD? To obey is better than sacrifice, and to heed is better than the fat of rams.”

Deuteronomy 11:1 “You shall therefore love the LORD your God, and always keep His charge, His statutes, His ordinances, and His commandments.”

Hebrews 13:17 Obey your leaders and submit to them, for they keep watch over your souls as those who will give an account. Let them do this with joy and not with grief, for this would be unprofitable for you.

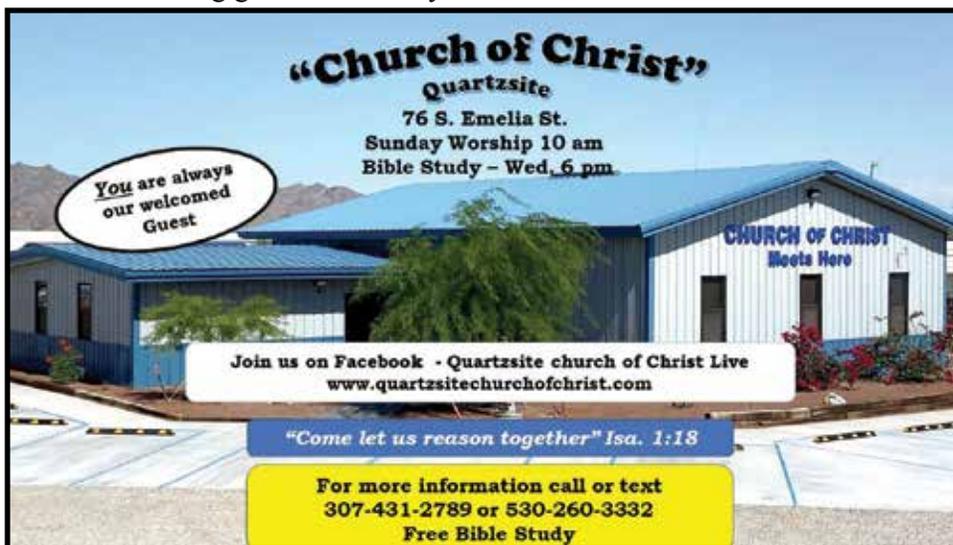

Revelation 14:7, 12 [7] and he said with a loud voice, “Fear God, and give Him glory, because the hour of His judgment has come; worship Him who made the heaven and the earth and sea and springs of waters.” [12] Here is the perseverance of the saints who keep the commandments of God and their faith in Jesus.

John 14:15 “If you love Me, you will keep My commandments.”

“When a good thing takes the place of The Best thing, that is a bad thing.”
