The year was 1952. Robert Taft, a three-term U.S. senator from Ohio known as “Mr. Conservative,” was running for the Republican presidential nomination. This was his third and most promising try. He was the clear favorite among Republican voters, a prospect that was terrifying to the Establishment.

Taft was a true believer in small government and the free market. He had emerged as the leader of the GOP about six years earlier, in 1946, when Republicans took both chambers of Congress. That Congress ended up cutting taxes, balancing the federal budget, and reducing the national debt. It accomplished all that under Taft’s leadership.

By 1952, though, the elites had sufficient control of the machinery of both parties to enable the historic nomination skulduggery that happened later that year. But despite its stranglehold over both parties, the Establishment had yet to fully convince average Republican voters to embrace internationalism and the welfare state. That mission would be accomplished over the following decades.

In 1949, the Establishment had created an organization to pull the Republican Party to the left. The Democrats already had one by then; it was called Americans for Democratic Action. Nelson Rockefeller funded the creation of the GOP version, called Republican Advance. By 1952, Republican Advance was looking for a GOP candidate who accepted President Franklin D. Roosevelt’s New Deal programs as a permanent feature of American life, as well as someone who had a favorable view of globalism. This candidate also needed to be popular enough to stop Taft. Enter war hero

The Two-Party Illusion

Dwight David Eisenhower.

Big Business and Big Banking were all-in on Eisenhower. Human Events, a conservative newspaper that favored Taft, wrote in January 1952: “Bankers and financial interests which play ball with and profit from the Fair Deal ... are just as much a menace to the wealth of the country as Socialists, Communists and corrupt practitioners. These elements of high finance played a role, and a big one, in getting us into both World Wars.”

By May, Taft had finished the primary and caucus season up 462-389 in committed delegates. Things looked promising, but then the Establishment started turning the screws. Mainstream newspapers began to run editorials designed to convince voters that if they elected Taft, Republicans would lose the general election. Remember, Republicans hadn’t won the White House in 24 years, since before the Great Depression. They needed this win.

The GOP convention kicked off in July. Once the smoke cleared, Eisenhower had captured 595 delegates to Taft’s 500. Eisenhower went on to win the presidency and solidify FDR’s socialist programs, which remain to this day. The Establishment torpedoed Taft’s nomination. John Birch Society founder Robert Welch, who authored a controversial book on Eisenhower, The Politician, called what happened to Taft “the dirtiest deal in American political history.”

Taft and the Republican grassroots electorate were the victims of a scheme the Establishment has been using for some time — controlling the nomination phases of both parties. The point is to corner general-election voters into having to choose between two Establishment-approved candidates who will essentially push the same core policies. Georgetown University professor and Establishment historian Carroll Quigley cited the 1952 Republican nomination slugfest between Taft and Eisenhower as an example of that strategy at work.

Quigley did not view the battle between Democrats and Republicans as a true contest offering a choice. It’s an illusion. He wrote: “The argument that the two parties should represent opposed ideals and policies, one, perhaps, of the Right and the other of the Left, is a foolish idea acceptable only to doctrinaire and academic thinkers. Instead, the two parties should be

Letter from the Editor

Leesa Bolden, LAc
TFPP Editor in Chief

At a time when the world feels increasingly fractured—by war abroad, by corruption at home, and by a political culture that seems intent on devouring itself—it is worth asking a simple but piercing question: what has happened to our ability to see one another clearly?

Scripture offers a foundation that is both timeless and urgently relevant. In Leviticus 19:18, we are instructed not to seek revenge or bear grudges, but to “love your neighbor as yourself.” Christ reaffirms this in Matthew 22:37–40, declaring that loving God and loving our neighbor stand as the greatest commandments. Mark 12:31 echoes the same truth, while Romans 13 reminds us that all law is fulfilled in this single act of love—a love that “does no harm.” James calls it the “royal law,” not as a suggestion, but as a standard. Yet today, this standard is not merely neglected—it is inverted.

Across the globe, nations justify violence as necessity. Leaders speak of peace while funding destruction. Here at home, Americans are encouraged to see one another not as neighbors, but as enemies. Political discourse has devolved into a theater of accusation, where truth is less important than narrative, and power outweighs principle.

We are witnessing attacks not only from one side of the political aisle, but from all sides. Constitutionally grounded voices—figures like Congressman Thomas Massie and others who dare to challenge both entrenched power structures and executive overreach—find themselves targeted, not for wrongdoing, but for independence. Whether the pressure comes from the political left or from within the orbit of the Trump administration itself, the message is the same: conformity is rewarded, dissent is punished.

Beneath this conflict lies something deeper and more insidious. We are no longer seeing reality—we are projecting it.

Each of us, in our own way, constructs a version of the world shaped by our expectations, fears, and desires. We look at others not as they are, but as screens upon which we project our own internal narratives. The political opponent becomes a villain. The ally becomes a hero. The truth becomes secondary to the story we have already decided to believe. This is not new, but it is now amplified to a dangerous degree.

Like a film projected onto a screen, what we see is not the thing itself, but a creation of light and shadow. The real source—the projector—remains behind us, unnoticed.

Our minds, filled with judgment and assumption, shape the images we then mistake for reality. When we love, a person appears radiant; when we hate, the same person appears irredeemable. Yet the person has not changed—only our projection has. This is the crisis of our time.

When citizens cannot distinguish between reality and projection, manipulation becomes easy. When we fail to examine our own judgments, we become certain of things we have never truly seen. When that certainty hardens into ideology, it justifies everything from slander to censorship to violence. The result is a nation—and a world—where division is not merely present, but profitable.

The call of Scripture cuts directly against this tide. To love your neighbor as yourself is not a sentimental phrase; it is a discipline of perception. It requires us to pause when judgment arises and ask: is what I see truly there, or is it something within me? It demands humility, responsibility, and the courage to confront our own minds before condemning others. Without this, there can be no justice—only accusation. No truth—only competing illusions.

If we are to restore anything resembling a constitutional republic, or even a functional society, it will not begin in Congress or the courts. It will begin in the individual willingness to see clearly—to drop the projections, to question the narratives, and to recognize the humanity in those we are told to despise.

Only then can we begin to rebuild trust. Only then can we hold leaders accountable without becoming what we oppose. And only then can we live out the “royal law” that has been with us all along.

Love does no harm. The question is whether we still believe that—and whether we are willing to act like it. I love you all. God Bless America. Keep praying that the truth continues to emerge and that God’s light extinguishes all of the darkness in the hearts of those wanting to rule over us. God bless and protect us all!

Rapid Rise of Red-Meat Allergies a “Ticking” Time Bomb

By Rebecca Terrell, 05/27/2026
TheNewAmerican.com

Cases of a tick-borne disease that renders victims permanently allergic to red meat are skyrocketing in the United States. The condition “has proliferated from just a few dozen known cases in 2009 to as many as 450,000 now,” reported The Guardian last summer. The outlet quoted expert Brandon Hollingsworth of the University of South Carolina: “We thought this thing was relatively rare 10 years ago but it’s become more and more common and it’s something I expect to continue to grow very rapidly.... We’ve seen an explosive increase in these ticks, which is a concern.... It seems like an oddity now but we could end up with millions of people with an allergy to meat.”

He is referring to AGS, or alpha-gal syndrome, a condition triggered by the bite of a Lone Star tick (among other parasites), which introduces a sugar molecule called alpha-galactose (alpha-gal) into a person’s body. Alpha-gal causes an allergic reaction to mammalian meat. Other symptoms include hives, gastrointestinal issues, and anaphylaxis, a life-threatening allergic reaction.

“Moral Bioenhancement”

While most red-blooded Americans would view AGS as a bad thing, some scientists are rejoicing. For example, a paper published in the journal Bioethics last year postulated that if eating meat is morally wrong, then promoting parasite-induced allergies could be morally obligatory. Citing arguments common to animal-rights activists, they propose using a known disease to achieve their goal of turning all humans into herbivores.

The Two-Party Illusion

almost identical, so that the American people can “throw the rascals out” at any election without leading to any profound or extensive shifts in policy.”

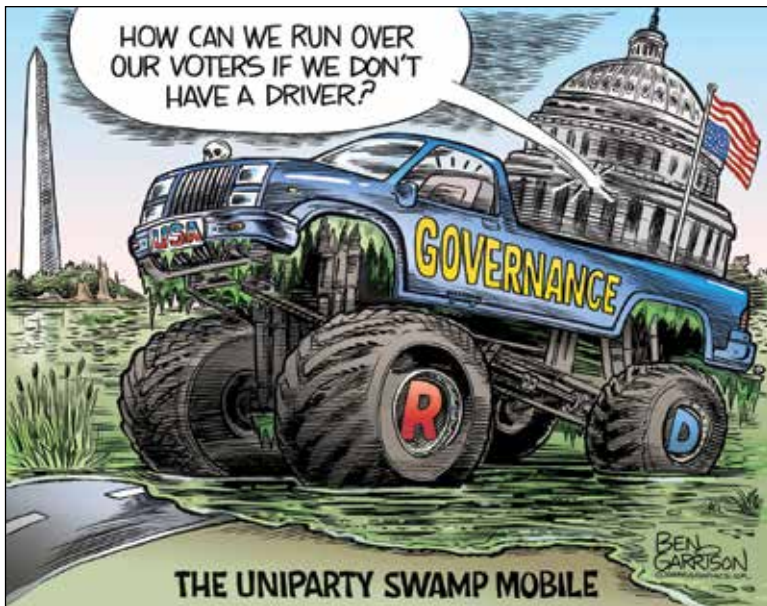

Quigley described the machinations of the Uniparty, a term that has only recently become common but refers to something that has existed since at least the beginning of the 20th century. The Uniparty is a singular political behemoth dressed up as two distinct political movements. It keeps the foreign wars going, the national debt rising, the federal government perpetually bloated, and individual liberty on a permanent trajectory of reduction.

The Uniparty’s tentacles stretch beyond control over presidential candidates. It is a broad network of political power that overlaps with and serves the interests of the cabal of Insiders making up the international conspiracy. It is a system comprised of powerful donors, many of whom donate to both political parties; Deep State agents (including globalist-oriented intelligence elements); tax-exempt organizations; media reporters and personalities; Capitol Hill staffers; presidential Cabinet members who hail from globalist think tanks such as the Council on Foreign Relations (CFR); entrenched bureaucrats; and, of course, the majority of federal legislators. It is a system that’s internally reinforced so that no matter who’s in the White House or which party controls Congress, the Uniparty’s core policies march along undisturbed.

A prominent component of the Uniparty is the CFR, a private think tank that was built up with funding from the Carnegie, Ford and Rockefeller foundations. In his book

The Invisible Government, former FBI agent Dan Smoot said this about the CFR: “I am convinced that the Council on Foreign Relations, together with a great number of other associated tax-exempt organizations, constitutes the invisible government which sets the major policies of the federal government; exercises controlling influence on government officials who implement the policies; and, through massive and skillful propaganda, influences Congress and the public to support the policies.”

CFR members permeate every influential institution, from media to the corporate world to academia to government, and the council has been placing its agents in presidential cabinets since at least the Herbert Hoover administration. Hoover himself was a CFR member, as were his treasury secretaries. FDR’s treasury secretaries were also CFR, as was his secretary of war, Henry Stimson. Harry Truman’s administration was riddled with CFR people. Eisenhower, whom we mentioned earlier, had more CFR members in his administration than the previous presidents. Eisenhower himself was CFR, as was his vice president, Richard Nixon. So were his

CIA directors, his national security advisors, his economic advisor, his health secretary, etc.

Many Americans believed and hoped that Donald Trump would finally break the Uniparty’s stranglehold, and for a while it looked as though the president truly was at odds with it. Democrats and Republicans attacked him viciously and tried to prevent his ascension. The Deep State worked overtime to impede his agenda, especially during his first term. They buried him in investigations, hoaxes, and impeachments. Then, according to many Americans, they stole his election victory in 2020. After that, they tried to lawfare him into ruin and imprisonment. He appeared to be a true enemy of the Uniparty.

However, in his second term, Trump has, at least in some ways, morphed into a Uniparty man. It’s been a stunning reversal. Aside from his tremendous accomplishment in securing the border, severing ties with some international organizations, and achieving some success in restoring sane energy policies, Trump 2.0 has been a typical neoconservative president. He continues the long-standing pattern of reckless deficit spending (though this was the case even in his first term), for instance, and has shown no interest in using his influence to reduce the government’s footprint in our lives. There is no better example of Trump’s Uniparty turn than his newfound appetite for bombing campaigns and wars. He’s bombed Somalia, Iraq, Yemen, Syria, and Nigeria — mostly to neutralize legitimately malign actors, but always without congressional approval. He also has launched unconstitutional war actions in Venezuela and Iran. The war in Iran has left many Americans scratching their heads, especially since one of Trump’s main campaign promises was that we would stop the military adventures. For years, he told ecstatic rallygoers that under him there would be “no more regime-change wars.” He largely kept that promise during his first term, but then carried out the regime-change campaign in Venezuela and Iran in his second.

Many Americans today believe that another Uniparty tentacle is foreign influence. Indeed, the threat of foreign influence on American policy is as old as this country. In his Farewell Address, George Washington warned Americans that hyper-partisanship creates opportunities for foreign nations to influence our policies. Washington told the people, “[Partisanship] opens the doors to foreign influence and corruption, which find facilitated

Red-Meat Allergies

The men who dub this stealth coercing “moral bioenhancement” are two medical ethicists with Western Michigan University. Their paper is called “Beneficial Bloodsucking.” They rationalize that because most adverse effects are temporary and nonfatal, the end justifies the means: AGS primarily affects meat consumption for the rest of a person’s life, a necessary goal to prevent animal cruelty. They suggest that genetic editing of ticks to enhance AGS transmission is feasible and even obligatory.

One of the two authors is Parker Crutchfield, Ph.D., who previously published a 2019 essay arguing that compulsory “moral bioenhancement” should be covert, and who, during the Covid-19 pandemic, proposed a compulsory, covert “morality pill” to force noncompliant people to follow public-safety measures. The other author, Blake Hereth, Ph.D., a member and former chair of the American Philosophical Association’s Committee on LG-BTQ People in the Profession, lists pronouns as they/them and stumps for Black Lives Matter.

Morally Indefensible

A response paper, “Why It Is Wrong to Promote Alpha-Gal Syndrome: A Response to Crutchfield and Hereth,” challenges their claim that AGS would reduce animal suffering, noting shifts to other meats such as poultry and fish. Moreover, argue the authors, the proposal is morally indefensible as it violates bodily autonomy. AGS carries lifelong risks and provides no health benefits.

“Moral bioenhancement” is important to refute because the Crutchfield/Hereth duo is not a one-off. Bioethicist S. Matthew Liao of New York University has long advocated biomedical modifications to discourage meat consumption. However, his stated goal is to mitigate global warming. His 2012 paper “Human Engineering and Climate Change” suggested artificially inducing red-meat allergies by stimulating immune system intolerance to bovine proteins. “There’s this thing called the Lone Star tick, where, if it bites you, you will become allergic to meat,” he said during a panel discussion at the World Economic Forum. “So that’s something we can do through human engineering.”

Gates’ Involvement

The circumstances recall funding by the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation for research into genetically engineered cattle ticks. In 2021, the foundation granted nearly $1.5 million to Oxitec Ltd. for this purpose, and an additional $4.8 million in 2023 after reported efficacy. Gates is also famous for investments in pharmaceutical companies involved in tick-borne disease treatments and in plant-based and lab-grown meat companies. Additionally, the foundation funds genetically modified mosquitoes as part of its malaria research. There is no definitive evidence linking Gates-funded research to the increase in AGS cases, but the timing and overlap is disturbing.

Also of note is the historical use of aerial dispersal of insects and ticks for bioweapons testing during the Cold War. Operation Big Itch witnessed the U.S. military dropping some 670,000 uninfected tropical rat fleas from aircraft at Dugway Proving Ground to test dispersal methods in 1954. Two years later, Operation Drop Kick involved uninfected mosquitoes released over residential areas in Georgia and Florida to study disease spread. Last year, the U.S. House passed an amendment introduced by New Jersey Republican Chris Smith, ordering reviews of tick and insect bioweapons experiments conducted by the Department of Defense throughout the 1950s, ’60s, and ’70s.

Due to the current inexplicable uptick in ticks, perhaps Congress should instead investigate whether such methods are in use today.

The Two-Party Illusion

access to the Government itself through the channels of party passions. Thus the policy and the will of one country, are subjected to the policy and will of another.”

So, here we are: A nation under the yoke of a malevolent network that projects a façade of choice while deceptively exerting a tight grip over the most crucial policies. The picture we’ve painted is gloomy, especially given Trump’s disappointing and somewhat surprising betrayal, but it is not hopeless. There is more hope now than there has been in decades.

More Americans today than ever realize the Uniparty exists. The younger generations are especially disillusioned and skeptical of the current power system, and it appears we are in the midst of a mass awakening.

The work is just beginning. First, we need more Americans to realize that the Democrat-Republican paradigm is an illusion. The Insiders’ core agenda items — persistent and suicidal deficit spending, perpetual wars, and increasing government power at the expense of individual liberty — advance no matter which party is in power. Those agenda items are enough to bring about a tyrannical one-world government.

The people must break the Uniparty’s death grip. Truth is the biggest threat to its power; that’s why people must have an accurate understanding of constitutional principles and the government’s proper and limited role in our lives. We must spread the truth, and that’s a task that anyone who reads this magazine can help with.

We must also elect enough constitutionally oriented lawmakers. Having constitutional legislators is essential for passing legislation that will reduce the government to its originally intended size, repeal the Federal Reserve Act and shut down the central bank, and enforce constitutional restrictions on the executive branch, especially in the arena of war. These steps will break up the centralized power Big Government has over our lives and reintroduce the government’s original checks and balances. They will transfer power back to the people, and that will essentially neuter the Uniparty.

BLYTHE, Calif. — Over the coming months, Blythe Speedway will be honoring and highlighting the sponsors whose support has helped shape our journey and make our vision a reality. These businesses are more than sponsors—they are valued partners who have believed in our mission from the beginning and continue to play an important role in the success of our racing community.

We are proud to begin this series by recognizing two organizations that have stood with us from day one: ACE Hardware and Ramsey Towing. Both in Blythe.

strengthened the speedway's presence throughout the region.

As Blythe Speedway continues to grow, we remain committed to recognizing the businesses and individuals who have helped make that growth possible. Local sponsorships do more than support race nights—they help sustain a venue that provides affordable family entertainment, promotes tourism, and showcases the positive spirit of our community.

Strong partnerships are at the heart of every successful community project. The continued support of ACE Hardware and Ramsey Towing serves as a powerful example of what can be accomplished when local businesses invest in local dreams and community-focused initiatives.

Blythe Speedway extends its sincere appreciation to both organizations for their loyalty, generosity, and belief in the vision from the very beginning. Their commitment has helped transform ideas into accomplishments and has played a significant role in creating a destination that residents can proudly call their own.

The Endgame of Technocracy Is Upon Us

By Patrick M. Wood
TheNewAmerican.com

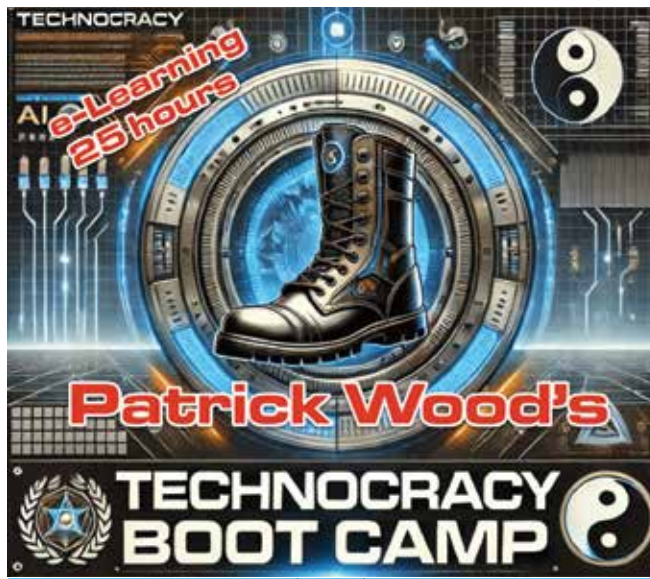

Most Americans sense that something is deeply wrong. They feel it in the creeping surveillance, the algorithms that seem to know what they are thinking before they think it, the cashless payment systems that track every purchase, the facial recognition cameras that multiply like mushrooms after rain. They feel it, but they cannot name it. They reach for familiar labels (Big Government, Big Tech, socialism, fascism) but none of them quite fits. That is because what is being constructed around them is none of those things. It is something older in conception and newer in execution than any of those ideologies. It is Technocracy.

I have spent nearly 50 years researching globalization and Technocracy, beginning in 1977 when I co-authored Trilaterals Over Washington with the late Professor Antony C. Sutton. Across six books and hundreds of articles, I have traced a single, unbroken thread from the 1934 Technocracy Study Course — written by engineers at Columbia University who believed they could replace capitalism, private property, and representative government with a scientifically managed society — to the digital infrastructure being deployed around us today. The thread has never broken. The names change, the institutions evolve, the technology advances, but the architecture remains the same: total registration, continuous inventory, individual tracking, centralized distribution, and no holdouts.

What follows is an overview of the four principal mechanisms by which Technocracy is now threatening your freedom and privacy: the digital control grid, transhumanism, social credit scoring, and artificial intelligence. These are not separate phenomena; they are interlocking components of a single system. Understand one and you begin to see the others; understand all four, and the picture becomes unmistakable.

The Digital Control Grid

The phrase “control grid” sounds like conspiracy theory to those who

www.technocracy.news/store/technocracy-boot-camp

have not studied Technocracy’s own literature. It should not. The original Technocrats were explicit about what they wanted to build. On page 232 of the Technocracy Study Course, Howard Scott and M. King Hubbert listed seven requirements for their proposed system. The first two demanded continuous, 24-hour registration of all energy conversion and consumption. Requirements three through six demanded a comprehensive inventory of all production, all consumption, and every individual in the system — including “a record and description of the individual.” The seventh requirement specified that every member of the population must be included. No exceptions, no opt-outs.

That was 1934. The technology for such a system did not exist then. It does now. The modern digital control grid operates on three layers. The first is programmable digital currency. When the GENIUS Act was signed into law on July 18, 2025, it created the first federal regulatory framework for stablecoins — privately issued digital dollars backed by U.S. Treasury securities. These are not neutral instruments of exchange like cash. They are programmable. The issuer can embed conditions into the code, e.g., what you can buy, where you can buy it, when you can buy it, and from whom. If the platform operator decides to freeze your wallet, restrict your purchases, or revoke your access, there is no constitutional protection, because the stablecoin is classified as a private-sector financial product, not a government currency. Tether, the largest stablecoin issuer, already holds more than $127 billion in U.S. Treasuries — more than the sovereign holdings of most nations. President Trump’s family’s USD1 stablecoin, issued through World Liberty Financial, had exceeded $13 billion in market capitalization by early 2026.

The second layer is asset tokenization. When BlackRock CEO Larry Fink declares that every stock, every bond, every fund — every asset — can be tokenized, he is describing the conversion of all tangible property into digital tokens on a blockchain. Fractional ownership sounds democratic. In practice, it means you hold a speculative financial instrument that exists entirely within the rules of a platform you did not build and cannot influence. You cannot live in your fraction of a building. You cannot will it to your children as a family inheritance. You cannot defend it. If the platform operator delists the token, adjusts the smart contract, or revokes access, your “ownership” evaporates. This is the abolition of private property dressed in the language of financial innovation.

The third layer is digital identity. When a biometric or credential-based ID is required to access the currency platform and the tokenized asset marketplace, every participant becomes a known, tracked, and permissioned entity within the system. Access to property, commerce, and economic life becomes conditional on maintaining your standing within the identity framework. The convergence of these three layers — programmable money, tokenized assets, and digital identity — produces a closed system in which nothing needs to be confiscated because nothing is ever truly owned.

This is the control grid. It is not theoretical. It is being deployed right now in Gaza, where the Board of Peace (headed by Trump) is constructing the world’s first fully integrated digital financial system (also headed by Trump) on a population of 2.3 million people whose banking infrastructure has been 93-percent destroyed. What is tested in Gaza will not stay in Gaza.

Transhumanism: Restructuring the Human Being

If Technocracy seeks to restructure

society, transhumanism seeks to re-structure human beings. I have called Technocracy and transhumanism the “evil twins” because they share the same philosophical DNA: the conviction that the scientific method is the only path to truth, that human nature is a problem to be engineered rather than a condition to be respected, and that a self-selected elite of scientists and technicians is qualified to make these decisions for the rest of humanity.

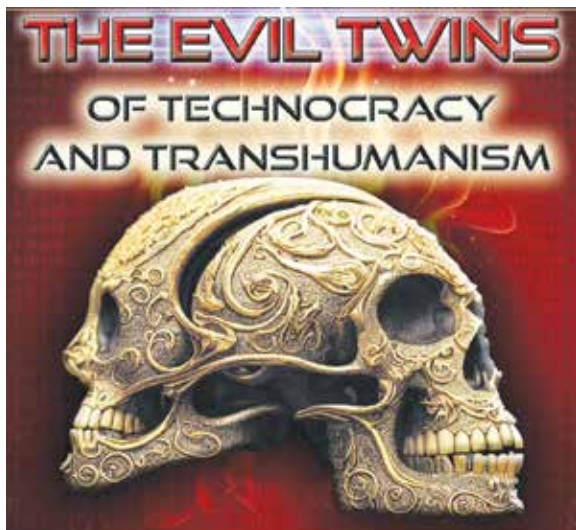

Transhumanism is the belief that human beings can and should transcend their biological limitations through technology — genetic engineering, neural implants, nanotechnology, artificial intelligence, and the merging of human consciousness with machines. Its proponents speak of “enhancement,” “longevity,” and “the singularity” — the point at which artificial intelligence surpasses human intelligence and the distinction between man and machine becomes meaningless.

This is not science fiction. Elon Musk’s Neuralink has already implanted brain-computer interfaces in human subjects. CRISPR gene-editing technology allows scientists to modify the human genome with a precision that was unimaginable a decade ago. The wearable health technology being promoted under initiatives such as Robert F. Kennedy, Jr.’s “Make America Biotech Accelerant” is building the infrastructure for continuous biometric surveillance — smart rings, clothing-embedded sensors, and implantable trackers that collect real-time physiological data and transmit it to AI-powered analytics platforms. The stated purpose is preventive healthcare. The operational effect is the continuous, granular monitoring of the human body by systems the individual does not control.

The trajectory is clear: from wearables on the body, to implants in the body, to modifications of the body’s fundamental genetic code. At each stage, the individual surrenders autonomy to the system in exchange for a promised benefit — better health, longer life, enhanced cognition. At each stage, the system acquires deeper access to what it means to be human. The Technocracy Study Course described its goal as “a Continental system of human conditioning.” Not education. Not opportunity. Conditioning. The transhumanist agenda is conditioning taken to its logical extreme: the re-engineering of the human organism itself.

The Transhumanist Bill of Rights, now in its third version, extends legal personhood to “all sentient entities,” including artificial intelligences and digitally augmented humans. This is not a fringe document. It reflects the working assumptions of a significant and growing segment of the Silicon Valley elite who are now embedded in the highest levels of the U.S. government through figures such as Peter Thiel, Elon Musk, and David Sacks.

Social Credit Scores: The Gamification of Obedience

China did not invent the concept of social credit scoring. It merely implemented it first. The Chinese social credit system, which began rolling out in 2014 and had achieved near-total penetration by 2020, assigns every citizen a numerical score based on financial behavior, social interactions, political activities, religious affiliations, and personal associations. High scorers enjoy travel privileges, access to better schools, and preferential employment. Low scorers are denied airline and rail tickets, barred from certain jobs, and publicly shamed on government blacklists. The system is enforced through a network of hundreds of millions of facial-recognition cameras, massive AI-driven data analytics, and the integration of financial transaction records, social-media activity, and real-time surveillance data.

Americans tell themselves this cannot happen here. They are wrong. The infrastructure for a Western social credit system is already in place — it simply operates under different names and through different mechanisms.

Consider the trajectory. Financial institutions already use algorithmic scoring systems that go far beyond traditional creditworthiness. PayPal, Stripe, and major banks have de-banked individuals and organizations for their political views, their religious convictions, or their public statements on contested issues. Insurance companies are experimenting with real-time behavioral data from wearables and smart home devices to adjust premiums. Employers increasingly screen social-media history as a condition of hiring. The environmental, social, and governance scoring framework — ESG — applied social credit principles to corporations before public backlash forced a partial retreat.

Now add programmable digital currency to this equation. When every dollar you spend is a data point on a blockchain; when your digital identity is the key that unlocks your access to commerce; and when AI algorithms analyze your purchasing patterns, your movements, your associations, and your online activity in real time, you do not need a government ministry to assign you a score. The score assigns itself. The system does not need to punish you overtly. It simply makes life incrementally easier for the compliant and incrementally harder for the noncompliant — a transaction declined here, an interest rate adjusted there, an insurance premium increased, a loan denied, a job application filtered out by an algorithm you never see and cannot appeal. This is the soft totalitarianism that the technocratic system produces. It does not need jackboots. It needs data.

Artificial Intelligence: The Management Brain

Artificial intelligence is not merely one component of the technocratic system — it is the component that makes all the other components operational. Without AI, programmable currency is just a digital ledger. Without AI, tokenized assets are just database entries. Without AI, surveillance cameras are just cameras. Without AI, biometric data is just data. AI is the brain that integrates all of these inputs into a unified system of prediction, classification, and control.

Peter Thiel’s Palantir Technologies is the exemplar. Co-founded in 2003 with seed funding from the CIA’s venture-capital arm In-Q-Tel, Palantir has grown to be the dominant provider of AI-driven data analytics for the U.S. government. Its market capitalization had exceeded $328 billion by early 2026. In August 2025, it secured a $10 billion, 10-year enterprise agreement with the U.S. Army — the largest AI contract in military history, consolidating 75 separate contracts into a single framework. Its platforms, Gotham and Foundry, fuse data from social media, public records, government databases, financial transactions, and sensor networks into predictive analytics that can identify, locate, classify, and anticipate the behavior of individuals and groups.

Palantir’s tools are deployed across the Department of Defense, the intelligence community, Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE), the Social Security Administration, and law-enforcement agencies at every level. The company’s FALCON system, used by ICE, has been instrumental in tracking and deporting immigrants. Its AI platforms are being integrated into healthcare through Health and Human Services collaborations, into finance through partnerships with institutions such as Fannie Mae, and into international defense through NATO contracts and agreements with the U.K., Canada, Australia, and the Persian Gulf States.

When Our Word is No Longer Good

The pattern of media reports – based on White House leaks – that an agreement with Iran is almost completed has become predictable. Where once the markets fluctuated wildly (and some insiders made huge profits with the information), each time we hear that the deal is almost complete only to see it fall through, the markets barely move.

It is dangerous to have a US Administration that no one in the US or the rest of the world believes. When White House “sources” claim a deal is in sight only to have President Trump post another AI graphic of the US military – or himself – firing missiles at Iran, the futility of engaging with the United States becomes reinforced to the rest of the world.

This is not projecting strength. It is signaling moral and ethical bankruptcy, and it is dangerous. In a world where no other country sees value in negotiating to end disputes with the US government, the only solution is to prepare to use force against it. A US government whose word is no good will soon find a world that refuses to speak with it.

That is what we have seen with the Iranian response to the US surprise attacks of last June and this February 28th. Two times the US used lies and deception that we were negotiating as an honest partner as cover for a pre-planned attack. How can any country negotiate in such circumstances?

There is a word for this: nihilism. It is the belief that there is no truth. Only the convenient lies and deceptions to force one’s will. Governmental nihilism leads to bankruptcies both financial and moral. Nearly $40 trillion in debt demonstrates the former bankruptcy, while our foreign policy of war and aggression demonstrates the latter. A world that sees force as the only way to negotiate with the United States may not attack us immediately. But it will prepare to do so. That is what Iran has done for the past four decades. That is what our “rivals” China and Russia have done. Others are following suit.

The government and its neocon mouthpieces continue to propagandize the American people that we have the strongest military in the history of the world. And while it is true that we have a powerful military, more expensive than most others combined and capable of projecting force worldwide, it is also irrelevant.

Despite the relentless propaganda of “War Secretary” Hegseth, we are slowly learning the truth about the US war of aggression against Iran. Just a few weeks of fighting has nearly depleted our arsenal while barely denting that of Iran. Despite the US Administration’s initial claims that 90 percent or more of Iran’s military was destroyed, we now know that the opposite is the case: nearly 90 percent of Iran’s military remains intact.

What we should have learned from 20 years wasted in Afghanistan – that a nation fighting for its homeland has an immense advantage – has still not been learned. Having the “most powerful military in the world” is irrelevant if the US continues to pursue a global military empire. There will never be a military strong enough for that. It is a lesson we have just learned in Iran.

If the American people are not willing to demand that their elected officials uphold the Constitution and restore our good name as honest brokers, I am afraid the future consequences of our current nihilism will be grave.

The Endgame of Technocracy

The implications are clear: What can be surveilled can be predicted; what can be predicted can be controlled. When AI systems analyze your financial transactions, your physical movements, your social connections, your health data, and your digital communications simultaneously, they do not merely observe your behavior. They anticipate it. Privacy advocates have warned that these systems enable “pre-crime” monitoring — the capacity to flag and intervene against individuals not for what they have done, but for what the algorithm predicts they might do. This is the fulfillment of the Technocracy Study Course’s requirement for “specific registration of the consumption of each individual, plus a record and description of the individual.” The language of 1934 is clinical; the technology of 2026 makes it operational.

This is the point that most analysts miss: AI is not politically neutral. It is structurally technocratic. An AI system makes decisions based on data, algorithms, and optimization targets defined by its operators. It does not deliberate. It does not consider rights.

It does not respect the dignity of the individual. It processes inputs and produces outputs. It is, by design, the “science of social engineering” that Technocracy promised in 1934 — the scientific operation of the entire social mechanism, with no place for politics, politicians, or the messy, inefficient, gloriously human process of self-governance.

The Convergence

These four mechanisms (the digital control grid, transhumanism, social credit scoring, and artificial intelligence) are not developing in parallel. They are converging. The digital control grid provides the infrastructure. Transhumanism integrates the human body into the infrastructure. Social credit scoring provides the behavioral enforcement mechanism. And AI provides the management brain that ties it all together into a unified system of surveillance, prediction, and control.

The convergence is not accidental. It is the fulfillment of a design that was laid out 90 years ago by men who believed that engineers and scientists were the only people qualified to run civilization. The technology has finally caught up to the blueprint. What the original Technocrats could only dream about in the age of punch cards and slide rules their intellectual descendants can now implement with blockchain, biometrics, and artificial intelligence.

The question before us is not whether this system can be built. It is being built. The question is whether we will recognize it for what it is before it becomes irreversible. The labels keep changing — sustainable development, the Green New Deal, the Great Reset, the Fourth Industrial Revolution, the Board of Peace. The architecture does not change: total registration, continuous inventory, individual tracking, centralized distribution, no holdouts, no opt-outs. From birth to death.

Americans have a narrow window in which to push back. That window requires understanding. You cannot fight what you cannot name. Now you can name it. It is Technocracy. It has always been Technocracy.

The Unmentionable Race? WNBA Avoids Marketing Golden Goose Caitlin Clark

By Selwyn Duke 05/27/2026
TheNewAmerican.com

“The white race is the cancer of human history...,” wrote feminist author Susan Sontag in 1967. Now, almost 60 years later, some may wonder: Has the white race become the cancer of marketing?

Many have long noted that black Americans are overrepresented in commercials and ads. At the same time, others complain, whites in commercials are often portrayed unflatteringly. But this may seem mild compared to what the unprofitable Women’s National Basketball Association (WNBA) has done in recent marketing. It has taken its most valuable “product” — white player Caitlin Clark — and whited her out. It all reflects, too, how, far from dead, wokeness is still whacking whiteness.

As you may know, Clark has, in a measure, done for the WNBA what legendary Arnold Palmer (and, later, Tiger Woods) did for golf. An amazing talent, she has drawn new fans and helped popularize the league. Nonetheless, complains sports journalist and commentator Clay Travis, her team, the Indiana Fever, isn’t exactly hot on her.

“It’s reminiscent of satirical police photo lineups with nine white guys and a single black guy,” quips pundit Mike McDaniel. He then quotes Fox News: “Just days after choosing Fever rookie Raven Johnson over generational superstar Caitlin Clark to front the promotional graphics for Sunday’s matchup against the Seattle Storm, Indiana took the court and let the box score settle the discourse. Indiana secured a commanding 89-78 victory over Seattle, though the real story unfolded in the stark contrast between the league’s forced promotional face and the team’s actual focal point, which was a marketing mishap....”

McDaniel then adds: “In the previous game, Clark scored 30 points. She’s more than capable of running up even higher scores, but she selflessly provides assists for her teammates and more. In the game where she wasn’t promoted, she scored 21 points — outpacing all her teammates and also handed out ten assists and seven rebounds. Those rebounds are more significant in that she’s not a center.” This is typical for Clark, too, McDaniel emphasizes. In fairness, this shows that the Fever are willing to tout Clark, to an extent. More on the marketing realities momentarily.

Adding further perspective, McDaniel states that it isn’t just the recent marketing oddness that tells the tale. The WNBA has also tolerated, if not winked at, frequent serious fouls against Clark. Some have caused her injury, too. It’s almost as if they’re not concerned about losing their golden goose.

Now, McDaniel points out, the league is even snubbing her. And how did the ad-promoted Raven Johnson do? Fox again: “Thrust into the spotlight as the unexpected “poster child” for the Fever in the WNBA’s promotional rollout, Johnson’s on-court production miserably failed to match her sudden marketing billing. In 17 minutes of action off the bench, Johnson failed to register a single point, dropping a giant goose egg on the stat sheet. While her defensive energy contributed to the team’s depth, a scoreless night highlighted the utter absurdity of the league elevating a backup guard over the most prolific scorer in basketball history, especially on a night when the team was already missing its star center.”

Now, sport is frivolity, of course, constituting the “circuses” in man’s bread-and-circuses category. It would hardly be worth commenting on, except that the aforementioned reflects deeper cultural matters. So how can we explain Clark’s air-brushing? Travis states the obvious. McDaniel seems somewhat incredulous that the WNBA, a business, would fail to market its biggest draw. Clark is much like Tiger Woods (a “black” golfer) and Danica Patrick (a woman in auto racing), too. That is, she’s a novelty; in her case, a successful white woman in a largely black league. Novelties, especially successful ones, are gold mines. Yet there is a method to the WNBA’s madness.

Prejudice or Marketing Prudence — or Both?

First, note here that the league has lost money virtually every year since its 1997 inception. Though some teams did turn a profit in 2025 owing to the Clark effect, the WNBA overall may still be in the red. (It exists only because it’s subsidized by the NBA.) The point? Not having to worry about profit and loss gives you the luxury to indulge bottom-line-lowering discrimination. Second, Clark did get great attention when first entering the WNBA. Predictably, too, the legacy media and other wokesters cried discrimination. “It’s only because she’s white!” they bellowed. (Well, duh. It’s that novelty factor again.)

The Enemy Has a Vote

The anti-weaponization fund policy initiative sounds good, but what would the enemy do with such a policy?

By Allen West, 05/29/2026
ThePatriotPost.us

The title of this missive comes from a military maxim in operational planning. We learned that one should never plan an operation in a void, where you do not consider the actions of the enemy. He does have a vote.

We would go through what we call a wargaming process, where we would consider our action-enemy reaction-our counteraction. As the law of physics says, for every action there is an equal and opposite reaction. This premise should also apply to governing principles for promoting certain policies and legislation. I remember during my time in Congress when the reauthorization of the Patriot Act came up. I did vote for a three-month extension; I wanted a little more time to research and develop my position. After wargaming the Patriot Act, especially the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act (FISA), my decision was not to support the five-year reauthorization. I was concerned about constitutionality, as well as what could happen if someone else used FISA for purposes not originally intended. Perhaps it would have behooved the Bush administration to wargame out the Patriot Act and associated policy changes. Too often, we rush into creating a new government agency, policy, or program without looking long-term.

I think we all know what happened when the Obama administration got hold of FISA and used it for their nefarious purposes against candidate and President Donald Trump. The enemy always has a vote, and we should be circumspect when creating a “new” government policy or initiative, lest we fail to recognize how the political opposition could use it. The Marxist left in America is not about fairness or niceties, as Barack Obama once quipped, you must “punish your enemies.” That is the essence of the Marxist mind, “by any means necessary.”

And so it is, when I read about President Trump wanting to create an “anti-weaponization” government fund, I evaluate this policy initiative with the same scrutiny. What happens if the Marxist left were to continue such a policy? I would bet that this would be one of the Executive Orders that a leftist President would not rescind. As well, it would create a precedent that I do not believe is constitutional. You are going to put the American taxpayer on the hook for providing compensation for the nefarious actions of certain government actors. If we are to try and restore constitutional governance, along with reducing excessive government spending, this may not pass the smell test. If anything, perhaps the American taxpayer should have a say in this policy? Yes, this is something that sounds great, popular with some, but remember, after 9-11, who would disagree with something called the Patriot Act?

We have a legal process by which the individual American citizen can “petition the government for redress of grievances,” a constitutional right. Instead of creating a government fund, the constitutional right approach would be to file a civil suit against a named government actor. Or if there are many litigants, then a class-action lawsuit. Yes, I hear you, the justice system is skewed left.

I have often stated on this platform that the courts are part of the Marxist left’s three branches of rule, the other two being the media and academia. This is why constitutional conservatives need to pay more attention to judicial races and stop disregarding their importance. And this is why the leftists are fuming mad about being at a 6-3 disadvantage in the U.S. Supreme Court. By the way, that is the only court that the Constitution establishes. The lower jurisdiction courts are established by Congress. Sure, you may throw a fit, but that does not concern me. The anti-weaponization fund policy initiative sounds good, maybe a populist idea. However, when one considers that the enemy has a vote, what would they do with such a policy? As well, is this really within the constitutional enumerated powers, duties, responsibilities, and roles of the federal government as articulated in Article I, Section 8 of the Constitution? I seem to recall only (18) powers enumerated; hence, the 10th Amendment states that all else is delegated to the States and the people.

Let’s try to get the federal government back into its prescribed constitutional box, one that is restrictive. If we continue to desire a federal government, or any level of government, to be a panacea for everything, it will only continue to grow above and beyond its intended scope. And a government that is big enough to give you all that you want and desire is also the same one that can take it away. Because the enemy has a vote.

The Unmentionable Race

Then there’s this: the market-reality factor. I had Grok artificial intelligence analyze the WNBA’s viewer demographics, and here’s what it found, in part (all quotations Grok’s):

- Women, who lean left as a group, constitute 44 percent of the WNBA’s fans.
- Blacks are 34-45 percent, and they may bristle at a “black” league trumpeting a white player.
- Forty-seven percent “of fans are aged 18-34 (higher than the NBA’s ~42% and far above the ~30% of the overall U.S. adult population). About 50% of avid fans are under 35” and younger people skew left.

- An inordinate percentage of fans come from the East and West coasts — more liberal regions. Midwest fans are underrepresented.
- “Fans tend to be engaged [and] values-driven (e.g., receptive to social consciousness in sponsorships)...”

- About “25% of lesbians in the U.S. watched WNBA games on TV;

21% had attended a game....”

- Approximately “29% of season-ticket holders were lesbians.”

No Mystery

The last three lines say it all: The WNBA clearly has a very liberal viewership. Its leadership is likely left-wing, too. Nonetheless, it seems probable the league is walking a fine line. It wants to market Clark for profit — but also not seem as if it’s “favoring the white girl.” Whatever the case, it reflects how wokeness is alive and well. In fact, when it’s operative in collectively notable population segments (the aforementioned audience), it’s more than alive. It’s thriving. Why, some may even say that wokeness is the cancer of recent human history.

Israel Hosts LGBTQ Festival Near Sodom and Gomorrah

The Daily Article 04/23/2026
www.denisonforum.org

You read that headline correctly. Organizers in Israel planned “Pride Land,” a four-day event June 1-4 at the Dead Sea to promote the LGBTQ community and to highlight the region as a destination for LGBTQ tourists.

The fact that the Dead Sea is the likely area of Sodom and Gomorrah has not gone unnoticed by commentators across the cultural spectrum.

As the “America Reads the Bible” emphasis continues in Washington, DC, this week, we’re thinking together about relating God’s word to our secularized culture. We’ve discussed the power of Scripture to change hearts and lives when we submit to its truth in accountable community.

Today, let’s apply this discussion to the most crucial moral issue of our time. Despite the constant attention our culture gives to LGBTQ issues, today’s topic is even more urgent, not just for millions of lives but for the very future of our nation.

Four reasons for the popularity of abortion

According to Guttmacher data, 1,125,930 abortions were performed by clinicians in the United States in 2025. So-called “medication abortions” account for 63% of all abortions in our country. A recent Pew Research Center study adds that nearly four years after the Supreme Court overturned Roe v. Wade, a majority of Americans continue to say abortion should be legal in all or most cases.

I understand why, I think. Pro-life advocates such as myself are up against four cultural currents.

One: Many Americans have privatized truth and are therefore convinced that morality is individual and subjective. “My body, my choice” is the rallying cry of the pro-abortion movement.

Two: Our society is equally convinced that illegality should be defined by harm done to others. What consenting adults do in the “privacy of their own homes” is no one else’s business, or so advocates for LGBTQ sexual activity say. Pornography, prostitution, and polyamory are similarly (and wrongly) termed “victimless crimes,” which is why prohibitions against all three are being liberalized today. Many see abortion in the same way, tragically ignoring the fact that every abortion kills a baby.

Three: In the “age of Trump,” evangelicals are increasingly caricatured as dangerous to society. When we promote biblical sexual morality, we are accused of puritanical legalism akin to The Handmaid’s Tale. When we stand for the preborn, we are supposedly waging a “war on women.”

Four: The more our secularized society stigmatizes evangelicals, the more we are tempted to keep our views to ourselves. I’ve sometimes heard Christians say, “I wouldn’t choose to have an abortion, but I have no right to tell someone else what to do.” In this way, they can maintain the veneer of biblical faith without paying the price of proclaiming it to its opponents.

“They sacrificed their sons and daughters”

In such a culture, it is especially critical that God’s people embrace and advance biblical morality, whatever the cost to ourselves. The sicker the patient, the more urgent the cure.

To this end, consider a passage I read recently referring to the Israelites’ entrance into Canaan: They did not destroy the peoples, as the Lord commanded them, but they mixed with the nations and learned to do as they did. They served their idols, which became a snare to them. They sacrificed their sons and their daughters to the demons; they poured out innocent blood, the blood of their sons and daughters, whom they sacrificed to the idols of Canaan, and the land was polluted with blood. Thus they became unclean by their acts, and played the whore in their deeds (Psalm 106:34–39).

Is sacrificing “sons and daughters” not akin to sacrificing preborn children (cf. Leviticus 20:2)?

How did God respond? The anger of the Lord was kindled against his people, and he abhorred his heritage; he gave them into the hand of the nations, so that those who hated them ruled over them. Their enemies oppressed them, and they were brought into subjection under their power (Psalm 106:40–42). A holy God cannot bless that which is unholy. Nor can a loving Father bless that which harms his children. Accordingly, God withdrew his hand of protection and blessing from his people, and they were “brought low through their iniquity” (v. 43; cf. Leviticus 20:4–5).

Is God judging America for abortion?

Is God doing the same with America? Many Americans, especially those in the middle class, are deeply unhappy about the economy. More workers are pessimistic than optimistic and work is “joyless,” while anxiety is an epidemic and “life often seems meaningless.”

There’s more:

- Our nation will soon mark the twenty-fifth anniversary of 9/11, with the threat of Islamic terrorism no more resolved than it was on that tragic morning.

- Many of the founders of artificial intelligence are warning of a day when the machines take over and exterminate humanity.
- Medical experts warn that another coronavirus-like pandemic is a near certainty, adding the plausibility that the next virus will be more deadly than COVID-19.
- China is playing the “long game” toward global dominance, with economic, military, and technological strategies that threaten America’s status and even our future.

We have faced individual threats akin to these dangers before, from world wars to threatening technological advances to pandemics to geopolitical enemies. But never have we faced such threats at the same time.

I have no prophetic authority by which to state with certainty that our nation is being judged by God for the horrific sin of abortion. But I cannot state with certainty that this is not the case. And I know with certainty that every life lost to abortion is a child created by God and precious to him (Psalm 139:13–16; Jeremiah 1:5).

I also know with certainty that every mother who chooses abortion becomes its victim as well. As Mother Teresa noted, “Abortion is profoundly anti-women. Three quarters of its victims are women: half the babies and all the mothers.”

America’s leading cause of death

It is therefore critical that America’s Christians declare and defend biblical truth regarding the sanctity of life from conception to natural death. Abortion is far and away the leading cause of death in the US. As many babies die from abortion in our country as Americans die from heart disease and cancer combined.

If you could do something to prevent all heart attacks and all malignancies, would you do it? If you could prevent just one, wouldn’t you?

Future Without Massie

By Joel Salatin, 05/20/2026
ronpaulinstitute.org

Yesterday was a sad day for me. My dear friend and fellow principled American, Congressman Thomas Massie from Kentucky, lost the Republican primary for his seat. It is now on record as the most expensive primary congressional seat campaign in American history.

Why was it this important, this pivotal? Because Massie, like Congressman Ron Paul before him, could not be bought. And Washington, both Republicans and Democrats, cannot abide partners who refuse to be bought.

During his gracious concession speech, Massie mentioned a list of things he stands for:

1. Quit fighting other peoples' wars.
2. Quit sending ANY money overseas and meddling in other countries' affairs.
3. End the Department of Education
4. Open the Epstein files—after passage 6 months ago, his transparency bill took out two dozen CEOs, including the CEO of the World Economic Forum, an ambassador, a prince, prime minister “and I still have seven more months.”
5. Bill of Rights, including the 7th amendment which is under attack with a litigation “Get out of Jail Free” card.
6. Cutting spending—“they ran DOGE out of town; Elon Musk discovered it was easier to land a rocket backwards than get anyone in Washington to cut $100 of spending.” (That was a good line.)
7. MAHA—we're tired of eating poison; we need food freedom and medical freedom
8. Basic decency. Massie is a class act, and as vintiperative as his opposition was, he never resorted to name calling and gutter language.

In a most gracious affirmation, he said “what happened today was God's will; it couldn't have happened otherwise. Now we have to figure out the purpose of our loss.” Let me parse this theology a bit: a difference exists between permissive will and interference will. Many things happen within God's permissive will that God doesn't like and certainly didn't initiate.

This is why in the Lord's prayer, Jesus prays “thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven.” Too often, God's will is NOT done on earth; therefore to pray that it would be done is a profound recognition of the difference between permissive and proactive will. Think about a child who earns some money and wants to blow it on something stupid. Good parents will let the child spend it on stupidity within permissive will in order to learn lessons that couldn't be learned if the parent intervened in every decision.

So I would say God permitted this loss even though He may have wished for a different outcome. Lots of times we aren't privy to God's roadmap; we know the destination, but the route there is often fuzzy. But back to Massie.

In invoking God's will, he admonished his fans to not get mad or try to get even. He noted “we were not running against Trump; we were running for what we believe in.” That's a powerful contrast. The question before us is are there enough Americans left who believe in the Constitution, the Bill of Rights, and a Republic as originally envisioned by a 28-year-old Thomas Jefferson?

He wrapped up his cheerful concession speech with a raw milk toast—gotta love it—to his late wife, whose social media lit up when Massie introduced a raw milk bill. In the midst of the storm, she texted her husband: “OMG, I didn't realize the lactose lobby was so intolerant.” That's classic Massie humor and I can't wait to see his next steps. He guzzled the glass of raw milk as representative of freedom and personal agency.

I've been friends with extremely few politicians. As a class, I find them generally repulsive, but Massie is cut from a different cloth. We've become true friends and I'm dismayed that he was despised so vociferously by his fellow Republicans and especially Trump. Most people don't like bullies. Most people would be happy with someone who agreed with them 91 percent of the time. Right now, I'm excited and enthusiastic about where the Massie movement goes next. I'm with you, my friend. What do you think of Congressman Thomas Massie?

WhistleBlower News ~ Capt. Robert Riter, Candidate for Congress

Having enjoyed a stellar career as US Marine, US Coast Guard Special Agent, Dept. of the Defense Special Agent and FBI Special Investigator he is, today, a Whistleblower

By Justin Reed, Columnist
TFPnews.com

Having enjoyed a stellar career as US Marine, US Coast Guard Special Agent, Dept. of the Defense Special Agent and FBI Special Investigator he is, today, a Whistleblower.

Robert Riter's love of flight together with his passion for competence and safety have now taken him full circle. With over three decades as both a flight instructor and aircraft mechanic, he knows these fields better than most of those now holding governing positions in the industry — an issue that has brought about such vast changes that the industry itself is no longer able to govern effectively, leaving a tragic trail of plane wrecks and carnage in its wake.

Capt. Robert Riter is no ordinary whistleblower. His decades long career in aviation has taken him into the trenches as well as the skies and when his own plane engine split in two over Redlands, California, he set about to discover how and why the incident had occurred. What he has discovered is an astounding array of industry insiders whose carelessness, incompetence and inconsistencies have led to gross failures across the board — failures which have often led to catastrophe and death.

As the accident numbers continue to rise throughout the nation, so, too, do the death tolls.

Riter reports that he is under fire from both the FAA and NTSB following an accident in 2019 involving a former student who experienced an engine failure on take off while flying a group of skydivers. Eleven people perished when that plane crashed.

What followed was an investigation that uncovered vast discrepancies in the reports as opposed to the evidence discovered in the wreckage.

At first, the pilot was blamed. Later, the instructor (Riter) and, true to form, Riter has accused these governing agencies of establishing the pattern of blame that simply passes over those unqualified and potentially dangerous aircraft mechanics that Riter says are at the root of most aircraft disasters.

Now a candidate for Congress, Riter has become a crusader for an immediate return to the standards of aviation safety that brought about the trust in this industry that Americans have enjoyed for decades.

“Right now we are facing a terrible risk to safety, and we are seeing the loss of many innocent lives. This issue is that of aviation safety. As you have noticed our aircraft are literally falling out of the sky! I have been a pilot and aircraft mechanic for over 30 years. I have watched as the aircraft maintenance has declined. I have watched as the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) has known about these issues, and has taken no action.” Riter states.

In the case of his own incident over Riverside, California, and the catastrophic engine failure, he states, “This aircraft received maintenance at an FAA Approved and Supervised maintenance facility. This maintenance facility used an unlicensed mechanic — a person that had little to no experience, and did not even know how to use the tools to perform the work.”

With regard to the crash involving the skydivers, he hopes to press for accountability and FBI involvement in the investigation.

“There should be a Congressional inquiry into the event to ascertain exactly what cased the engine failure. Unless and until that happens, these types of incidents will continue to occur.”

In the engine failure case involving Rit-er's own plane, during the trial that ensured it was proven that the maintenance facility responsible for the repair had engaged in 27 Federal Aviation Regulations violations.

“The FAA was made fully aware of these violations and the tremendous risk to safety. Instead of addressing the issue the FAA covered it up and instead began an investigation into me for reporting it!

“Pilots and aircraft mechanics are truly devoted to protecting life. We are, however, being effectively silenced by the FAA. If we dare speak up we are targeted and destroyed. Our businesses destroyed, our reputations put into ruin, our lives shattered.

We are forced to stand by and watch as the tragedies escalate and more lives are lost. Over the past five years I have been contacting our current congressman, a Mr. Jay Obernotle, with no success. I have also been working up the chain of command at the FAA, only to find another layer of incompetence, corruption, and malice. No one seems to care about what is happening — or how many catastrophes ensue.”

Riter's distinguished career as not only a flight specialist but as an ex-governmental official operating in the capacity of a special investigator for decades should place him as a front runner in the field of aviation safety.

As the public becomes aware of the risks of flying in such an atmosphere of incompetency the uncertainty of flight is tantamount to a return to the days when flight was widely avoided.

Riter questions the lack of authenticity and transparency within the governing agencies and has even raised the issue of whether or not this might relate to the apparent ‘across the board’ restriction of travel for Americans. Are the recent failures of multiple airlines related to these ‘restrictions’?

Riter's investigations have also led to an exposé on the treatment of student pilots that aspire to become commercial pilots.

His work has uncovered strategies he says are designed to cause students to fail and resulting in student debt they will never be able to repay as pilots, as they had anticipated when they enrolled.

Instead, they encounter a system wide array of rules and procedures impossible to navigate successfully.

The reform Riter hopes to see happen must begin at the grass roots level — among people who care about aviation safety. From there, the reporting can be approached by others interested in systemwide reform. Only then, he states, can things begin to change.

“We are at the mercy of a system of failure and deceit, orchestrated by the very people we have trusted with aviation safety throughout the history of aviation, but these nameless bureaucrats do not answer to Congress,” he states.

“The FAA is now controlled by the House Aviation Sub Committee. This congressional subcommittee is filled with men and women who have absolutely no knowledge about aviation but instead rely on more nameless ‘advisors’ to instruct them.

Read one of my current articles titled, “FAA Caught In The Act,” an article showcasing an FAA Duty Director citing cancelled FAA orders falsifying official government reports.” [See: CaptThatGuy.com]

Riter is adamant that aviation can be saved and the war against it will end.

“We cannot afford to lose the entire field of aviation that's taken generations to build.

Together, we can change the trajectory we're on: for us and for future generations. Our lives — and theirs — depend upon it.

'Election Integrity' Clerk Tina Peters Released After "Politically Motivated" Prison Term

Former Mesa County Clerk Tina Peters, a prominent election-integrity advocate, walked out of a Colorado prison June 1st after serving a fraction of a nine-year sentence critics say she received for exposing discrepancies in county voting machines. Peters, a Trump ally, had argued she was acting as a whistleblower to preserve evidence of suspected election irregularities when state officials instead prosecuted her. Gov. Jared Polis ultimately commuted what he called an unusually harsh sentence for a first-time, nonviolent offender.

Judicial Watch Targets California's "Dirty" Voter Rolls

Judicial Watch sued California under the NVRA, alleging 873,092 voter registrations stayed inactive for at least three federal elections and that 20 counties with 3.4 million registrants removed 50 or fewer inactive voters from 2022-2024. They seek a court order forcing real list maintenance and frame the case as part of a national voter-roll cleanup push after similar settlements in Colorado, Oregon, Kentucky, and New York.

Whistleblowers Allege Chinese Parts in U.S. Voting Machines

The Election Fairness Institute says new whistleblower affidavits from Chinese factory workers and Taiwanese warehouse staff describe foreign-made components being deliberately funneled into U.S. voting machines at the hardware level. The statements, highlighted by Emerald Robinson and Patrick Byrne, allege CCP-linked parts were "switched in" via Taiwanese distribution hubs, with a purported screenshot referencing election equipment in Shanghai customs. EFI and Arizona Sen. Mark Finchem argue the claims show a deeply compromised supply chain and urge ending voting machines in favor of fully American-made systems or hand-counted ballots.

Colorado Scrubs 372,000 Inactive Voters after Judicial Watch Suit

Following a 2020 NVRA lawsuit and a 2023 settlement, Colorado removed 372,000 ineligible registrations, including people who died, moved, or became inactive. Judicial Watch calls it a major election-integrity victory and says its litigation has now helped trigger millions of removals in places such as Kentucky, New York City, and Los Angeles County.

Bezos Says Bottom 50% Should Pay Zero Income Tax

Jeff Bezos told CNBC the bottom half of U.S. earners, who pay about 3 percent of federal taxes, should pay no income tax, calling it "absurd" that a $75,000 nurse sends over $12,000 to Washington. He blames overspending and waste—citing New York City schools' $44,000 per-student costs with poor results—arguing the U.S. already has a highly progressive tax system and needs spending reform, not higher taxes on the wealthy.

Fed "Witchcraft" Is Killing Sound Money

A Mises Institute article says the Fed's 2-percent inflation target is institutionalized debasement that silently taxes savers to fund state borrowing. It contrasts this with the pre-Fed gold standard, where productivity gains often yielded mild, consumer-friendly price declines, and calls the Fed a state-backed banking cartel whose fiat money finances war and welfare through inflation rather than transparent taxation.

Mass Surveillance Has Turned America into a "Nation of Suspects"

Judge Andrew Napolitano warns that agencies such as the NSA, DHS, FBI, and local police now routinely surveil Americans without warrants or "articulable suspicion," reviving general warrants the Fourth Amendment outlawed. He cites bulk NSA collection rubber-stamped by the FISA Court, DHS biometrics and Stingrays, and FBI zero-click hacking as evidence of a fear-driven slide into a police-state culture where liberty is traded for illusory safety.

How Larry Ellison's Oracle Took Over China

Need to Know reports that Oracle co-founder Larry Ellison built a global data empire after winning a CIA database contract in 1977, learning to predict behavior from massive linked profiles. The piece says Oracle now processes data for hospitals, lenders, and even TikTok, fusing personal and protest-activity records into unified profiles that later helped train Chinese surveillance systems.

DOJ's 'Take Back America' Nets 271 Border and Smuggling Cases in Texas

In one week, the Southern District of Texas filed 271 immigration cases under Operation Take Back America, targeting illegal entry, reentry, and human smuggling. Prosecutors charged 249 people with unlawful presence—most with prior criminal records—and 19 with smuggling, including a trucker accused of transporting 42 illegal immigrants in a sealed, 92-degree trailer, as officials tout a broader crackdown to end "catch and release."

Trump DOJ Urges Supreme Court to Dodge New York Vax-Religious Liberty Showdown

Trump's DOJ, via Solicitor General D. John Sauer, urged the Supreme Court not to hear New York healthcare workers' challenge to the state's no-exemption COVID mandate. The brief says the mandate's repeal, thin factual record, and lack of a circuit split make the case a poor vehicle, while critics argue DOJ is effectively siding with employers that refused any religious accommodations, weakening Free Exercise protections.

Gunfire Near White House Sparks Brief Lockdown

Gunshots were reported near the White House on May 23rd, forcing Secret Service officers to clear the North Lawn and rush reporters into the press briefing room as the complex went into lockdown. Witnesses, including NBC's Julie Tsrkin, said they heard 20-30 shots before agents with guns drawn ordered them to run inside, while the Secret Service said it is investigating reports of shots fired at 17th Street and Pennsylvania Avenue, just outside the grounds.

Trump Weighs Iran Peace Deal with $300B in Reparations Fund

According to The New American's summary of a New York Times report, U.S. and Iranian negotiators drafted a 60-day ceasefire plan that would reopen the Strait of Hormuz and create an Iran reconstruction "investment fund" estimated at up to $300 billion. The draft includes ceasefires on all fronts, phased easing of a naval blockade, and talks on Iran's enriched uranium, while Trump insists any deal must permanently bar Iranian nukes, keep Hormuz toll-free, and ensure full mine removal before he signs off.

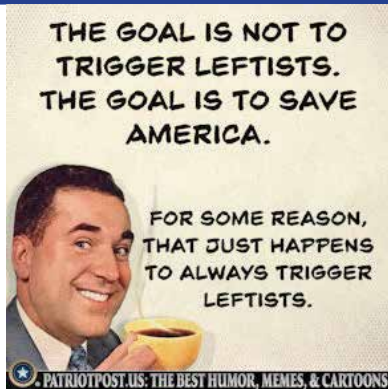

Trump Cuts "72 Jabs" Narrative Down to ~20

The Trump administration has overhauled the U.S. childhood vaccine schedule, claiming to slash "72 jabs" down to "about 20" by limiting universal recommendations to vaccines for 11 core diseases. In reality, federal documents show children will still receive roughly 22-23 shots for those 11 diseases, with additional vaccines reserved for high-risk kids or optional "shared decision-making," meaning total doses can still exceed 20 depending on parents' choices.

Congress Quietly Moves to Fuse US and Israeli Militaries in 2027 Defense Bill

A provision buried in the House's 2027 National Defense Authorization Act—Section 224, the "United States-Israel Defense Technology Cooperation Initiative"—would massively deepen US-Israeli military integration. The measure sets up joint research, co-production of weapons, licensing deals, "network integration," and "data fusion" across areas like AI, cyber, biotech, and autonomous systems, effectively tying the two militaries' tech and data together and shifting future aid into a more opaque, military-industrial partnership.

Israel's Deepest Lebanon Push in Decades Seizes Beaufort Castle

Israel has captured the strategic Crusader-era Beaufort Castle north of the Litani River, its deepest incursion into Lebanon since 1982, raising flags over the UNESCO-listed fortress overlooking northern Israel. The move comes amid escalating Hezbollah rocket and drone attacks and new Israeli warnings for civilians south of the Zahrani River to flee areas near Hezbollah sites, as Lebanese officials report thousands dead and wounded and U.S. diplomats worry the expansion will complicate fragile talks with Iran.

Iran Says It Hit US Base after American Strike near Bandar Abbas

Iran's Islamic Revolutionary Guard Corps says it targeted a U.S. airbase early Thursday in retaliation for what it called a pre-dawn American strike on a site near Bandar Abbas Airport. U.S. officials say their forces had just shot down four Iranian one-way attack drones that "posed a threat" around the Strait of Hormuz and hit a ground control station in Bandar Abbas preparing to launch a fifth, describing the actions as defensive.

DOJ's Handling of High-Profile Cases Fuels Double-Standard Concerns

A New American piece says Nevada's Israel-born U.S. attorney Sigal Chattah dropped a federal gun charge against Israeli national Ori Solomon, a nonimmigrant linked to an illegal Las Vegas biolab tied to CCP-linked operator Jia Bei Zhu, citing only "the interests of justice." Critics note he now faces only a state hazardous-waste count and compare this to another Chattah case where an Israeli cyber official fled to Israel after a Las Vegas child-sex sting, arguing DOJ shows selective zeal depending on the defendant.

Fairfax Schools Hire High-Priced Firm after Illegal Alien Assault Scandal

Fairfax County Public Schools hired powerhouse firm McGuireWoods—billing $700 to $1,850 per hour—to investigate how 19-year-old illegal immigrant Israel Flores Ortiz enrolled at Fairfax High and allegedly assaulted multiple girls. Police say Ortiz, who entered illegally from El Salvador in 2024, faces 13 assault and battery counts; DHS blasted Governor Abigail Spanberger's sanctuary-style policies ending cooperation with ICE, warning they shield "criminal illegal aliens" and endanger the public.

Freed Gaza Flotilla Activists Allege Rape; Israel Denies Claims

Global Sumud Flotilla participants claim they were beaten, tortured, and subjected to at least 15 sexual assaults, including rape, after Israeli forces intercepted their aid convoy in international waters. Activists describe degrading strip searches, groping, and forced penetration with a firearm on a converted landing craft, while Israel's military and prison service flatly deny the allegations as baseless, promising to review specific complaints as Canada and European governments seek answers on their citizens' treatment.

Thomas Massie Defeated by Pro-Israel Money Surge

NeedToKnow says Rep. Thomas Massie lost his Kentucky primary to Trump-backed Ed Gallrein in what AdImpact calls the most expensive House race ever, with over $25 million in ads. Massie blamed pro-Israel billionaires Paul Singer, Miriam Adelson, and John Paulson, plus AIPAC's United Democracy Project and the Republican Jewish Coalition, and notes Gallrein's narrow margin of 10,280 corresponded with a late deluge of 10,884 mail-in ballots. Nothing to see here folks.

"Feeding Our Future" Fraud Mastermind Gets 41 Years

NeedToKnow reports Aimee Bock, founder of Feeding Our Future, received over 41 years in prison for orchestrating a $250 million COVID-era food-aid fraud that claimed to feed needy children. Prosecutors say she exploited relaxed oversight to enroll sham meal sites, submit

Democrats Rattled as Spencer Pratt Surges in LA Mayor Race

ZeroHedge says independent candidate and former reality-TV star Spencer Pratt has turned Los Angeles's mayoral race competitive, raising about $2.7 million in under a month and nearly matching incumbent Karen Bass's cash on hand. With polls showing Bass up only single digits, Governor Gavin Newsom's late endorsement is derided as "desperate," as Pratt attacks both leaders over wildfires and homelessness and appears poised to force a November runoff if no candidate tops 50 percent on June 2.

$10 Trillion "Boom" Hype in Tiny NC Mining Town

A Wall Street Watchdogs promo claims Spruce Pine, North Carolina—source of ultra-pure quartz—sits atop a $10 trillion "resource boom" central to the chip supply chain. It says Trump will soon declare this "miracle material" a strategic resource and ban exports, forcing tech giants to buy from one "tiny" stock.

F-35 Supplier's Chemical Scare Hits amid Far-Left Attacks on Defense Industry

ZeroHedge reports a malfunctioning methyl methacrylate tank at GKN Aerospace's Garden Grove, California, plant—supplier of the F-35's canopy—forced about 40,000 residents to evacuate over Memorial Day weekend and has triggered dozens of lawsuits. The incident comes as far-left "Palestine Action"-style groups campaign against Israel-linked defense plants, though no evidence yet ties activists to the tank failure.

Wave of Junkyard Fires Raises Questions, Clouds Skies

At least a dozen junkyard fires this year—from Opa-locka, Florida, to Brownsville, Texas, Hollywood, Maryland, Camden, New Jersey, and Philadelphia—have forced evacuations, disrupted rail and road traffic, and fouled air with thick black smoke. In Florida, more than 80 units battled a five-alarm blaze that displaced 125 residents; elsewhere, officials blame high winds, hazardous waste, lithium-ion batteries, or possible arson as investigators probe a pattern that has become hard to ignore.

Lab-Grown Cocoa Turns Chocolate into a Corporate Experiment

The HighWire says Big Chocolate firms such as Mondelez, Barry Callebaut, and Lindt are partnering with startups to roll out cell-cultured cocoa that could make cocoa trees "optional" in the supply chain. These ingredients may enter U.S. foods under "self-affirmed GRAS" status without long-term human trials, raising fears that millions of small farmers will be displaced and consumers turned into unwitting test subjects in a patented, lab-grown food system.

Study Flags Erythritol's Potential to Damage the Blood-Brain Barrier

A University of Colorado Boulder study highlighted by The HighWire finds that erythritol, common in "zero-calorie" and keto products, sharply increases oxidative stress and clot-promoting factors in blood-brain barrier cells at doses similar to a single sweetened drink. Researchers warn that regular consumption across multiple erythritol-sweetened foods could raise ischemic stroke risk despite these products being marketed as healthy sugar alternatives.

VA DNA Program Turns Exposed Veterans into Lifelong Test Subjects

The HighWire reports that a Psychiatry Research analysis of 248,926 participants in the VA's Million Veteran Program links cumulative toxic exposures—Agent Orange, burn pits, anthrax shots, PFAS-tainted water—to higher rates of suicidal thoughts and behavior in every war era. Critics say the VA, after decades of downplaying such harms, is now harvesting DNA from over a million exposed veterans and sharing it with outside partners, effectively running a vast genetics experiment without full transparency or consent.

The Missionary Spy Behind JBS

Remembering the birth of John Birch, the Baptist missionary to China whose wartime heroism later inspired the name of the John Birch Society. Born on May 28, 1918 in India to missionary parents and raised in Georgia, Birch mastered Mandarin and went to China in 1940, where he helped rescue Jimmy Doolittle's downed airmen and later served as an intelligence officer for General Claire Chennault, organizing a network that recovered about 90 percent of Flying Tigers shot down behind enemy lines.

In August 1945, just days after Japan's surrender, Birch was killed by Chinese communists during a tense encounter near Suschow, Germany. His death was later denounced in the U.S. Senate as a politically motivated murder that early Cold War officials tried to downplay. Candy manufacturer and anti-communist Robert Welch, moved by Birch's story and the coverup around it, named his new organization after Birch, whose writings on limited government and Christian faith closely mirror the Society's motto: "Less Government, More Responsibility, and With God's Help, a Better World."

What Does the World Say?

When asked, AI (artificial intelligence) responded:

Deception is a pervasive theme in both religious texts and contemporary discussions.

In today's society, deception is often linked to issues like fake news and misinformation, which shape public perception and trust. Experts argue that integrity and truthfulness are essential in combating the widespread dishonesty that characterizes modern communication. Many religious teachings emphasize that deception is a tool used by malevolent forces.

This perspective highlights the need for vigilance against misleading narratives that can lead individuals away from truth. Overall, both ancient texts and modern discourse underscore the critical importance of discernment in a world rife with deception..

What Does the Bible Say?

Galatians 6:7-8 Do not be deceived, God is not mocked; for whatever a man sows, this he will also reap. [8] For the one who sows to his own flesh will from the flesh reap corruption, but the one who sows to the Spirit will from the Spirit reap eternal life.

Proverbs 10:9 He who walks in integrity walks securely, But he who perverts his ways will be found out.

Proverbs 12:22 Lying lips are an abomination to the LORD, But those who deal faithfully are His delight.

Matthew 7:15 "Beware of the false prophets, who come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly are ravenous wolves."

"When a good thing takes the place of The Best thing, that is a bad thing."

Things They Didn't Teach You in Church: Questions

By: Jim Brouillette
CCHW Real News HQ
(Rumble and YouTube)

Communism and socialism share the basic concept of denying individual rights, especially the right to own private property, claiming the state owns everything. Denial of property ownership is the essence of Marxism; everything belongs to the government, including you. The COVID scam never got to the point of denying personal property ownership, but it came close. Marxism is never Godly; it always centers on physical material. However, the Right to Own Property is biblical. The 10 Commandments are found in Exodus Chapter 20 and verse 15 reads; Thou shalt not steal. Something cannot be stolen from you if you don't own it. Using fear and the long-arm-of-the-law, local, state, and federal governments denied American citizens many rights during COVID including your right to ask questions. Our YouTube channel, CCHW Real News2676, had several videos taken down because we questioned the vaccines. In addition to vaccines, you were not allowed to question social distancing, where the virus came from, bans on group assembly, wearing masks, on and on. COVID challenged many of our public and personal norms, but the most devastating challenge to American citizen's personal rights was our right to question; Free Speech. You couldn't question anything, the government, science, the drug industry, education, or anything else involved with COVID.

I've always had a lot of questions, still do, while many of my questions have been answered by the Bible, I still have a few, the Moon Landing for example. I like to think I have an open mind, but I have never found a reasonable explanation of how Apollo 8 astronauts, and those that followed on subsequent trips to the moon, passed through the Van Allen Radiation Belts in the little tin-can they called a spaceship in 1968, and lived. Even according to NASA, astronauts must fly through the Van Allen Belts to reach outer space, and they say it is important to "fly through this region quickly to limit their exposure to radiation." Every account I have found claims; Apollo 8 astronauts spent "only a few hours" passing through the Van Allen Radiation Belts on their way to the Moon. Then of course, they would have spent a few hours more on their way back to earth. Question: How is that possible? Scientists estimate 20 minutes exposure to that level of radiation would be fatal. Having an open mind and being aware of advancements in technology, I observed the Artemis II space trip in early April 2026 with great interest but had another question. Can we now shield these astronauts from the enormous radiation they would encounter? When the trip was completed, I immediately went looking for independent astronomers that watched the trip around the moon, and there were some! I thought, wow maybe we can do it now! Then the question came. Were there really people in that tin-can?

The Bible talks about the Moon and its creation, but interestingly it is always used spiritually as a symbol of evil. The Sun represents God and His children; every prophecy about God's children is in accordance with the Sun or in days. Satan's children are prophesied about in terms of the Moon or months. The time anti-Christ and his troops will be allowed here on earth tempting God's children was originally 42 months and then shortened to 5 months: Matthew 24:22 And except those days should be shortened, there should no flesh be saved: but for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened. Then in Revelation 9:10; ... and their power was to hurt men five months. This is speaking spiritually; Satan is after your soul.

I have another question, as long as we are talking about the Moon and space travel. What are UFOs now called UAPs? And why did they change the name? According to CBS News; "The U.S. government replaced "UFO" with "UAP" to shed decades of cultural baggage and to cover a broader range of unexplained sightings..." In other words, to distance themselves from all the people they have been calling "weirdos" for the past 70 years. If you've read my book ANGELS or ALIENS? - you know what I think they are. I became an Eric von Daniken fan after reading Chariots of the Gods, which gave birth to the hit show Ancient Aliens. They refer to alien beings from other planets; I refer to spiritual beings from another dimension. The Bible calls them angels or sons of God; Job 1:6 Now there was a day when the sons of God came to present themselves before the LORD, and Satan came also among them. Or watchers; Daniel 4:17 This matter is by the decree of the watchers, and the demand by the word of the holy ones... These supernatural creatures are from another dimension; they have physical mass and can even reproduce with human women. Genesis 6:4 ...and also after that, when the sons of God came in unto the daughters of men, and they bare children to them... This was the reason for Noah's flood; read the entirety of Genesis Chapter 6.

In the first chapter of the Book of Ezekiel, he describes the vehicles that transport material things between dimensions. Ezekiel calls these vehicles wheels, and for a guy who has only seen an ox pulling a cart as a form of transportation, he does a pretty good job describing these vehicles and the beings inside them. Ezekiel 1:19 And when the living creatures went, the wheels went by them: and when the living creatures were lifted up from the earth, the wheels were lifted up. Those that question why the sons of God would need transportation, should consider our Laws of Physics: everything of this dimension must obey those laws, there are obviously different Laws of Physics for that other dimension. UAPs do not obey our Laws of Physics in this dimension, because they are not of this dimension. As we are told in Revelation Chapter 9 the sons of God are coming back. So, my final question to you is: are you ready?
